Monochrome Moments

Nothing is black and white, least of all the psychedelic '60s. Bruce Davidson's gelatin silver prints radiate with the decade's color despite their grayscale. In Witness, the Guggenheim fellow displays his own brand of candid photojournalism through three distinct collections. Portraits of impoverished families in Harlem and Brooklyn's rebellious youth pair with images of the South during the civil rights movement. See the signs of the time at the Robert Klein Gallery through March 30.

Ladies Who Launch News Travels Fast

The year is 1889: World newspaper reporter Nellie Bly (famous for posing as a patient in an asylum for an exposé) and Cosmopolitan editor Elizabeth Bisland take flight in opposite directions in hopes of breaking the fictional record set by Phileas Fogg in Around the World in Eighty Days. Matthew Goodman's work of literary journalism, Eighty Days, captures the excitement of their journey, and paints the women as trailblazers in more ways than one. The two embark on a wildly popular competition against the calendar, and each other, during a time when female reporters were consigned to the fashion and gardening pages. Hear him recount their globe-trotting adventures at Brookline Booksmith on March 20.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com]* Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SOUNDING OFF

Feast for the Ears

All that was missing were scantily clad servers to pop grapes in guests' mouths when the New England Conservatory held its annual black-tie scholarship gala, Feast of Music, at the Copley Plaza.

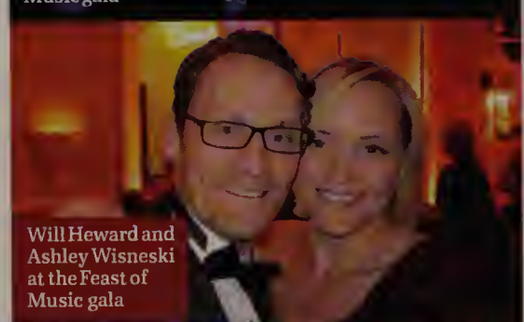
The elegantly decadent evening began with cocktails served in the Oval Room, after which everyone teetered to the ballroom, which was lavishly decorated and awash with lights that sparkled off jewels, gowns and a few bald heads.

What followed was a tour de force by superstar chef Lydia Shire, and each course was punctuated by a performance of American music—from ragtime and Copland to show tunes and opera—by the wildly talented students.

Spotted among the sea of shimmering fabulousness were cochairs Joseph Bower, Elizabeth Potter and Nancy and Murray Bern, dazzling Wellesley grad Catia Chapin, board chair Frank Wisneski and the luscious Lynn Dale, blonde bombshell Rita Rudyak, the flawless Setsuko Hori, hale and hearty Harold Pratt with the lovely Frances, arts patrons Suki and Miguel de Braganca, fun-loving bluebloods Jonathan and Sydney Winthrop, and so on and so forth down the list of Bostonians who appreciate great music.

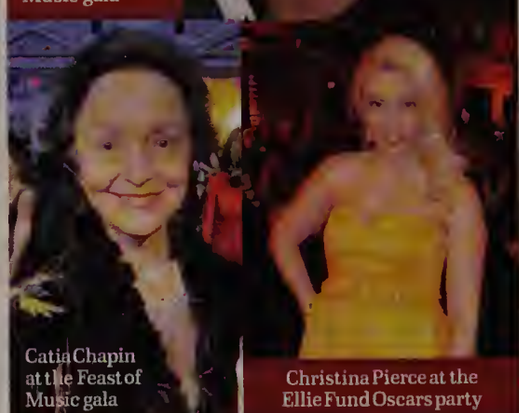
After dessert, everyone waltzed back to the Oval Room for dancing and coffee (or something a bit stronger), at which point the party received an infusion of fresh blood, with the likes of glamazon Laura Baldini, Dostoevsky character Joseph Gordon Cleveland, Manhattan maniac Joshua Duksin, the swanlike Chynna Pope, and other bright young things who would've looked delectable even without all that wine.

The evening aimed to raise money for 35 scholarships but wound up raising enough for 36, and the party spilled over into the hotel bar well into the wee hours.



The evening's archest exchange:

"I thought she was a lesbian."



"Apparently, so did her husband."

Lights, Camera, TV-Watching

There are those who live for awards shows and those who loathe them, but everyone can agree that they offer an excellent excuse for a party.

The Ellie Fund's annual Oscars bash is Boston's biggest and glitziest (and the only one sanctified by the Academy), with the added bonus that it raises money to provide for the immediate needs of breast cancer patients.

Held at the State Room, there were free-flowing bars and chef stations, and such red-carpet–ready locals as WCVB-TV glamazons Susan Wornick and Kelley Tuthill, fun-loving billionaire Ernie Boch Jr., über-groover Devin Hill and Baywatch bombshell Traci Bingham, kitchen kings Dante de Magistris and Jason Santos, the delightfully ubiquitous Ashley and Paul Bernon, brunette babe Penelope Fireman, Grace Kelly lookalike Kim Snell and the ever enthusiastic Conrado Bondoc, publicist to the stars Kate Shamon, the absurdly good-looking Christina and Ryan Pierce, the Real Housewives of Wellesley Hills, several women showing a lot of side-boob and one guy who said, "I invest Cher's money."

The award for best shoes was a tie between the sublime—a pair of beaded Manolos not yet available—and the practical—a pair of rhinestone-encrusted Uggs.

"I don't care about the Oscars, but I do care about drinking more vodka," said one guest, while another woman noted that all she needed in life was, "Spanx, wine, girlfriends and the occasional bong-hit."

Meanwhile, the tongue-twister award went to the guy who said he'd given up manscaping, except, "I still do due diligence down there." ✖✖✖

In Memoriam

If Truman Capote had grown up in East Boston, the son of a master tailor from Italy, he might've turned out like Alfred Fiandaca, the hugely charismatic fashion designer who died in February. Starting in the 1960s, Fiandaca began making First Lady–worthy wardrobes for high society in Boston (and eventually New York and Palm Beach), although he'll probably be best remembered for dressing Anne Romney. For those of us who were lucky enough to know him, he'll always be remembered as a sprightly, creative man who made anyone he was talking to feel like the center of the universe. R.I.P., Alfred.

Society of the Spectacle

Baseball writing, when it's not freeze-dried by sabermetrics, can have a liturgical feel, like a sermon stuffed with folk wisdom and roughage. If I said that baseball is a simile for life, a barometer for karma, a mystical invocation of the soul or Tao or grit, then people might nod and mumble, "'Tis true, 'tis true, give the man a nationally syndicated column." But no. Baseball is an entertainment, a spectacle no different from Roman chariots or Pawn Stars. Its only transcendental mystery is the Fenway sellout streak. And that's a Scooby-Doo–grade mystery at best.

There's a lot to be said for spectacle, though. Entertainment accounts for 3.6 percent of our GDP, or $531 billion. Sure, the bulk of this is cat videos, but even so, entertainment's crucial to our being, and not just because it plugs our brains happily into the Matrix. More than hungering for liberty or real estate profits or trans fats, Americans crave celebrity. And our most gilded celebrities are entertainers, which in Boston means politicians, chefs and athletes. Imagine the trifecta! If the mayor opened a fashionable Piedmontese trattoria and mastered the curve ball, he'd probably stay in office for, like, ever.

Speaking of entertainment, in this issue, Ezra previews the baseball season and Michael Holley meets Clay Buchholz. Also, Lydia Santangelo's fashion shoot goes hardcore Tudor. As Shakespeare wrote: "Through tattered clothes great vices do appear / A really dazzling Stella McCartney dress hides all."

LABOR OF GLOVE ▸

WHEN YOU'RE READY TO trade in your mittens for, well, mitts, know that there's a baseball-glove company that's close to home base. Insignia Athletics, headquartered in Worcester, is the largest manufacturer of American-made leather gloves and currently produces some 70 of these hand-stitched fly-ball catchers per day. "Insignia's gloves use the finest heavy native-steer hide, which sets our gloves apart in quality from most imported gloves," says owner Jim Devaney, a diehard Red Sox fan. The company, founded in 2008, uses its home-field advantage to obtain materials such as Midwestern leather, Kentucky laces and Wisconsin dyes.

To make its gloves fit like a glove, Insignia first develops a computerized design that's imprinted on bare hide. Then, the gloves are sewn, embossed, embroidered and laced (every element customizable with team colors and names). Even though the mitts are shaped at the factory, Devaney recommends breaking them in the old-fashioned way—by spending a few hours playing catch. And with a product that's made for America's pastime, it seems fitting that the handcrafted process is more traditional. "I love the legacy of baseball.... In today's fast world, it's almost impossible to believe that any other sport or event could keep the interest of spectators when the ball is actually in play only 11 minutes in a three-hour game," says Devaney.

Ring Up

The combination of orange, preserved lemon, black olive, arugula and Maras pepper is distinctly North African, and distinctly Rendezvous. So is the salad's main ingredient—squid from Point Judith, which chef/owner Steve Johnson flash-sears so that it tastes both ocean-clean and smoky with char. While these bold flavors hang together predictably well, the mix of textures does, too. The greens don't sink and sog out; they're fluffed up by paper-thin fennel and prickly tentacles, and buoyed by a scoop of meaty borlotti beans placed strategically at the bottom of the bowl.

BOMA REBOOT

GASTROPUBS DON'T necessarily mesh with chefs who voice a commitment to fine dining. So when Chris Bussell made the fateful step of taking the burger off BoMa's menu, it was clearly time for a new chef to take over at the four-month-old South End eatery. Enter Ryan Kelly, a veteran of Clio and Canary Square, and chef at the short-lived Tonic in Jamaica Plain.

Indeed, Kelly's inaugural menu draws heavily from Tonic's, including a scallop dish that's "almost verbatim," Kelly says. It's pan-seared scallops playfully paired with confit daikon radish that looks exactly like the shellfish. Kelly brought along executive pastry chef Emma Ozment, who's starting simply—pavlova with citrus and fresh ginger, chocolate mousse cake—and promises "molecular gastronomy stuff" to come. Oh, and now there are two burgers on BoMa's menu.

BOOKING IT: Twenty years after its founding, the Chefs Collaborative has published a cookbook that's impressively rich in both recipes and resources. You'll find a look at chefs' home pantries, an exploration of the benefits of grass-fed meats and guides to deciphering the labels of eggs, seafood and cheeses. You may never need to whip up a tamarind-paste substitute, but you can use the "fruit fusion salad" recipe as a year-round template by incorporating seasonal variations in greens and fruit.

AIMING FOR BOSTON: Mark Gaier and Clark Frasier, the James Beard Award–winning duo who own the acclaimed Arrows in Ogunquit, Maine, plan a fall opening for MC Medici Ristorante & Bar in the Seaport District. Befitting the name, the concept is the Renaissance—meaning Italian rustic food, not fairground turkey legs. And, naturally, it's in the Renaissance Boston Waterfront hotel.

Drink of the Moment

ALL A BUZZ

NAME: The Beekeeper

PRICE: $13

INVENTOR: Rialto beverage director/restaurant manager Young Won

INGREDIENTS: Barr Hill Gin, Bussey Brook honey/lemon verbena syrup, Suze liqueur, Crème Yvette

NAMESAKE: Rialto server Kristin McDonnell keeps beehives in Jamaica Plain, which she taps for the restaurant's honey supply.

IS IT CLOYINGLY SWEET? Hardly. Sugars are mostly present on the initial inhalation, but they're cleansed in a rush of floral and bitter flavors, buoyed by a trace of citrus. What's most surprising is the complexity of the aftertaste, which fizzes with tannins from the lemon verbena infusion.

GINNED UP: Won picked Vermont's Barr Hill Gin as the base, admiring its viscosity. "It uses honey in the distillation, and I wanted to emulate the honey syrup."

THE BEEKEEPER
Rialto, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (617-661-5050) rialto-restaurant.com

VERDICT: "It's not too dry, not too sweet," says Won, who trained under the alchemical Todd Maul at Clio. "It's a celebration of the bitter." Indeed, the dominant note is French Suze, an intense drink derived from the yellow gentian flower—a prime flavoring in Angostura bitters. Look for it in Picasso's "Verre et Bouteille de Suze" for bonus cultural cachet.

INSPIRATION: "Mine's a dryer version of the Bee's Knees that's really popular now," says Won. There's an added flowery nip from the Crème Yvette, which also softens the color.

PAIR IT WITH: Lamb fritters. The rich, tender lamb and crisp breading cast the drink's dryness into delicious relief. Alternately, use it as a refreshing segue into $1 oysters at the bar on Monday nights.

First Taste

THE FOUR-FRONT

At Hanover and Parmenter streets, four corners meet to form the heart of the North End. And there sits Quattro, the newly opened Neapolitan-style restaurant by Frank DePasquale.

A neighborhood icon, DePasquale also owns Bricco, Mare, the Gelateria and DePasquale's Homemade Pasta Shoppe, among other ventures throughout the city. "What I'm trying to do is take a little bit out of each and every one of my restaurants and put it in here," says DePasquale. "I just kept thinking of how the new places are in Italy, and this is what it's all about."

The 48-seat restaurant took over the space from Il Panino Express, but the interior has been redesigned to reflect the new concept. The eatery features two and a half walls lined with windows that open out onto the sidewalks, while marble tables and countertops complement a Marra Forni brick oven, imported from Naples. Even though this beast sits in the corner of the kitchen, somehow it feels like the centerpiece, and it gets nearly twice as hot as American alternatives, crisping a pizza in 45 seconds flat.

"There was a serious need for a brick, Neapolitan oven pizzeria, a rotisserie grill," says DePasquale. As such, Quattro poses itself as the greatest-hits version of his restaurants, pulling in proven chefs and menu items. The Parma prosciutto and mozzarella sandwich, for example, features fresh baked bread and imported cheese, elements that made this dish—his first sandwich ever—a hit.

Paninis and pizzas are joined by house-made pastas, as well as a risotto of the day, and sfizi (cravings, or small plates) such as arancini and potato croquettes, sirloin burger sliders and stuffed zucchini flowers. There's also a large rotisserie in the kitchen that produces full or half birds, served with traditionally prepared potatoes and vegetables. Separate grills cook fish and meat, so that the flavor of a whole branzino isn't mixed with the rack of lamb.

"I'm just happy that I had the chance to put this in such a great neighborhood and such a key spot," says DePasquale. "We thought of so many different names. Because it's my fourth restaurant and thinking of the four corners, I said, 'It has to be Quattro.'"

Q&A

THAT'S ALL FOLK

After hitting SXSW and before stopping by the Newport Folk and Firefly festivals this summer, Seattle-based Hey Marseilles, fronted by guitarist Matt Bishop, play Brighton Music Hall on March 29 to promote their latest album, Lines We Trace.

Where did the folk-music revival come from?

It's a lot easier these days for guys playing acoustic guitars and writing songs in their bedroom to expand their audience, just in terms of technology, the way the music industry works and the way that one can connect with other musicians. If you have an accordion in your band, six or seven years ago there's no way that radio would've wanted to put that on. There were certain gatekeepers that kept accordion players and clarinetists out of the pop-rock mainstream.

You and guitarist Nick Ward met at a kegger, right?

Yeah, it was at a house party in the University District. I was the guy with the acoustic guitar playing in the corner hoping that people would start to listen, and he was the only person that I attracted. It worked out for the best.

How did the band pick up classical elements?

Nick, Philip [Kobernik] and I were writing songs in their basement bedroom six years ago, and Philip and Nick knew Sam and Jacob Anderson, who happened to be playing cello and viola. We discovered that they were really a means by which we could make our sound unique, and they were also two of the strongest musicians being that they were classically trained. So we integrated that into our songwriting process.

Do you all write the songs together?

Essentially, yeah. The vast majority of the energy and time we spend is writing the music arrangements and the progressions for each instrument, and then I, by and large, write the lyrics. Even that's changed, because Philip has written lyrics for a couple of songs that we recorded, and a number of the other guys are starting to write, so it's definitely been a very collaborative process.

Sex, drugs, rock 'n' roll—choose one.

Of those three options? I was just considering the possibility that anybody would spend six weeks going on the road for anything other than rock 'n' roll—although if the option were presented, I'd probably take a tour of sex or whatever. My official answer is rock 'n' roll, or folk rock. Whatever the hell you call what we play.

Beauty

Heart of Gold

Eye-catching and warm, rose gold isn't just for jewelry: Apply it to your lips, cheeks and eyes, too. Known in metallurgy for combining gold, silver and copper, this gilded shade sports pink undertones—a more universally flattering hue than yellow or beige, and one that complements any eye color. And even if you missed that cruise to Cancun for spring break, the metallic finish brightens bland winter skin. Here's how to get your own Midas flush.

TO THE ST. PATRICK'S DAY PARTYERS: I don't even know where to begin. The only thing worse than the couple making out (or more) behind the dumpster by my apartment was the bottle of urine I had to walk by on my way to work the next morning. I know Boston loves to drink, and St. Paddy's Day is a great excuse to do just that, but is all the vomit really worth it?

To the Good Samaritan in a white pickup truck with a plow: You saw me starting to shovel out the end of my driveway on Adams Street in Arlington after the last blizzard and asked if I wanted some help. I asked how much you wanted, and you said, "Nothing." I rushed inside to get some money to give you, but by the time I got back outside the end of my driveway was cleared and you were gone. Thank you. The world is a better place because of nice people like you.

Grateful shoveler

To the construction workers who decide that 7:30 am is a good time to start backing up their tractors nonstop: For the love of sleep, don't. To make matters worse, nothing looks different when you leave, which leads me to believe that you were sent by my parents to make sure I'm awake at a reasonable time.

To Boston Dunkin' Donuts: I don't know if it's my privileged upbringing with Connecticut Dunkin' Donuts, but where I grew up, if I ordered cream cheese on my bagel it was done for me. Wine

Happy Returns

Carmenère has a wild story. Imagine a grape that once dominated Bordeaux, the world's most classic wine region, and then completely disappeared more than 150 years ago. It was thought extinct, only to resurface as one of Chile's signature grapes during the mid-1990s. Carmenère takes time to ripen and, if rushed, shows a harsh edge.

I'm an unabashed carmenère fan. The best ones taste rich and luscious, with just a hint of vegetal spice to balance the dense black fruit. Having recently tasted about 25 bottles from the 2010 and 2011 vintages, these are my favorites.

MARQUES DE CASA CONCHA CARMENÈRE, RAPEL VALLEY, 2010

($16, MARTY'S FINE WINES)
The largest winery in South America, Concha y Toro, produces a number of outstanding wines to complement its more popularly priced offerings. Casa Concha is unerringly good, whatever the variety, but this carmenère is among the best I've tasted. It has a smoky, black currant flavor and an enticing aroma accented with tobacco and chocolate. Supple and velvety, but with a refreshing core of tart, plummy acid, this is a layered wine and a stunner with grilled swordfish steaks.

CASA LAPOSTOLLE CARMENÈRE, RAPEL VALLEY, 2011

($11, BLANCHARD'S LIQUORS)
From the family that brought you Grand Marnier, the Lapostolle wines are spot on at every price level. This outstanding value entry is loaded with aromatics: toast, herbs, red fruit jam, tea leaf and cocoa. Featuring a touch of tannin, it's lively and fresh, with a beautifully balanced finish of bitter chocolate and spice. This is a sleek, sophisticated wine for the money and will dress up a plate of barbecued meat or burgers.

ERRAZURIZ ESTATE RESERVA CARMENÈRE, ACONCAGUA VALLEY, 2011

($13, DELUCA'S MARKET)
The Chadwick family makes one of the world's most impressive carmenères (Errazuriz Kai), which has won numerous international blind tastings, but this modestly priced bottle is stunning as well. With an aroma of coffee beans and expressive black fruit, it's soft yet intensely flavored. The creamy texture and lush, mocha notes are absolutely delicious with roasted chicken.

Playing It Safe

With more than 37,000 seats and 81 home games, Fenway Park sees droves of people filter through its grandstand during baseball season. While the fans are there to see the Red Sox, one behind-the-scenes team spends games with their backs to the field. Brian Fontas, a member of Fenway's security team, monitors the crowd from right next to the dugout. This unsung guardian of the people divulges tricks of the trade for handling sport fanatic debauchery—and how he caused some of his own.

HOW TO TRAIN LIKE A PRO

Despite his 15 years with the department, Fontas says he learns something new at each annual training. Guards work with the Boston Police Department and the bomb squad prior to every season. Fenway's security officials also tour ballparks around the nation, networking and sharing secrets—like modern-day spies in athletic khakis.

HOW TO MIX BUSINESS WITH PLEASURE

It all started with a glance across the grandstand. Almost four years ago, Fontas caught the eye of a pretty young thing while at his post by the dugout. That glance led to a chat after the game, which turned into a date and eventually marriage. It's a love story à la Fever Pitch, except both Mr. and Mrs. are diehard Sox fans.

HOW TO DOWN A STREAKER WITHOUT A SEXUAL HARASSMENT LAWSUIT

Though he's never seen one ballsy enough to go fully nude, Fontas recalls two fans who got their five minutes of fame for a mad dash across the field, superhero capes fluttering behind them. It's the craziest thing he's seen. Tackling an overexposed fan without awkward skin-to-skin contact is a group effort—strategically placed guards box in the daredevils, herding them (mercifully) out of sight.

MANY MOTHERS

A novel of adultery, parenthood and healing

THE TIE THAT BINDS THREE women is a baby. Tia has an affair with Nathan, who's married to Juliette. When Tia becomes pregnant, he leaves her. The baby is adopted by the emotionally distant, career-focused Caroline, who names the child Savannah.

Discovering Nathan's affair, Juliette slyly invites Caroline into her skincare business for a facial. The adoptive parent is unaware that she's showing off her new baby to a kind of excluded (but not unsympathetic) stepmother. Eventually, all the parties come together over little Savannah.

Plunging us into the different minds and hearts of these characters, Meyers unearths how their relationships to Savannah are affected in multiple ways. But the author makes every perspective engaging. She conveys their inner and outer lives, and the varying ways they connect with each other and with Savannah, whose head is turned in three directions. There's Tia's Southie world—the fragility that the loss of Savannah evokes and her wariness at being loved after surrendering her child. There's Juliette's confident stability. And there's Caroline's awkward mothering. All are richly told as each woman's pain slowly eases. ×××

By Randy Susan Meyers

"I guess I was too young in ways you can't see," Tia said.
"Like what?" Savannah asked.
Tia blinked rapidly. Nathan put an arm around her shoulder. "Like I wasn't married, and I didn't have a job or a good place to live," she said.
"That's why you gave me away?" Savannah asked. Oh, Jesus, please let me take this child's pain. That's what Caroline should research: how to surgically remove a child's pain and transplant it in the mother's body.

WHEREFORE ART

SEA HERE The James Royal Palm in South Beach, Miami

IF SOUTH BEACH IS A CANVAS, it's one painted by an Art Deco master with a weakness for thongs. Walking down the coastal path that runs parallel to Collins Avenue, on the left is a broad, white stroke of powder, mushroomed with blocks of monochrome umbrellas—blue for the Shore Club, orange for the Loews. There're dabs of tropical swimsuits, the background is a field of cornflower sea and ultraviolet sky, while the whole picture is lacquered in hedonism. To the right, the grand hotels tower in their summer whites and pastels, a rampart of stylized architecture against the Atlantic. The names are synonymous with parties, conceptual furniture and tanned women in Balenciaga heels. There's the Delano with its giant chess pieces and fashion shoot aesthetic; the W with its marble, shag and furious whimsy. And there's the James Royal Palm, which now slips into the highest stratum of South Beach hotels on account of its design and pointedly Floridian cuisine. It is, in concrete form, Art Basel, but with alligator empanadas at the bar.

The James Royal Palm is the reincarnation of the old Royal Palm Hotel, an Art Deco confection from the days of wartime newsreels and the Andrews Sisters. Architect Lauren Rottet has invested the shell of the building with a modern palette, but there's still evidence of 1939: a few porthole windows in the lobby, an old glass reception desk now repurposed as a coffee bar. The rest is rabidly 21st century, down to the blueberry-infused water on tap in the lobby and a sustainable and community-oriented gift shop that's actually called "Give."

But what you really notice is the art. The lobby's bar area is overlooked by a grandiose photo of a doe-faced model blundering into the headlights of an oncoming car. A long gaming table is stacked with interactive two-way mirror boxes that light up when moved to different spots. Each banquette and printed cushion is customized within an inch of its utility. Even the staff uniforms were designed by art students. Touting Miami's cultural mélange of Latin, European and American influences tossed against a paradisal coastline and spritzed with tanning lotion, the hotel's collection is called

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Sea turtles are drawn to electric lights, so waterfront hotels have to keep illumination under control to avoid luring them into a messy death on Collins Avenue. Hence, the beach path is surprisingly dark after dusk.

The spa, Renew, offers top-notch massages, including ones utilizing "herbal-infused ice cylinders."

BLUE HEAVEN One of the James' pools

An Ocean Apart. It extends to the guest rooms in the form of 150 original "day paintings"—the quick brush strokes and sketches jotted off by artists at the beginning of their day's work. The theme, you'll likely notice from the stylized nudes, is "The Bather."

The focal point for any South Beach hotel worth its complimentary cheese plate is, of course, the swimming pool. The James has two, along with a plunge pool for anyone in a hurry. Along with your towels and chaise lounge, you get a "beach box" containing fresh fruit, water and sanitizing wipes. Kindles and iPods are available to borrow, too. Duck out the back gate and a few steps through the palms takes you to the block of beach colonized by the hotel's orange umbrellas. A "sun concierge" is on hand to remind you to turn over when your back is sufficiently cooked, or to fetch you a water pail to cool your feet.

In light of the aquatic views, guestrooms sport muted greens and seafoam whites, with the bathrooms shimmering in dark tiles. There're the expected plasma screens and house-made chocolates with turndown service, as well as walk-in rain showers. Most rooms come with balconies, but if you splurge for a penthouse loft, you get an outdoor terrace with a gull's view of the Atlantic.

While the coffee bar sells Cuban breakfast sandwiches and guava pastries, the second-floor restaurant, Florida Cookery, offers more elaborate plates like eggs Benedict with cayenne-tomato shrimp. Although he's a New Orleanian, chef Kris Wessel feels ardently about Floridian food, with its emphasis on limes, frogs' legs and Everglades boar. Try the conch chowder and fritter or the sous-vide spiny lobster with sherry bisque, garlic zucchini and corn bread. There's also a "Weekly Snapper Series," direct from the boat to the sauté pan.

After a dessert of mango pie, step out the glass doors onto the pool deck into a silky, 76 degree breeze, undercut by a trace of cigar. The thrum of nightlife filters up from the terrace bar. It's time to paint the town. ✖✖✖

GRAND PRIXE

Tasting menus present three distinct dining experiences.

Asta
47 Mass. Ave, Boston
(617-585-9575)
astaboston.com

BEET THAT Asta's attention to detail extends from the lamb dish to individual pull-out silverware drawers.

DON'T UNDERESTIMATE Asta. Housed in an unassuming former pizza parlor wedged between a cupcake shop and a convenience store, the space was purchased by the young owners after they found a post on CraigsList. Shish Parsigian and chef Alex Crabb's 41-seat eatery has big ambitions to transplant the rarefied dining experience from the kinds of places where Crabb has cooked—L'Espalier, Noma and the French Laundry—into a modest neighborhood setting. Its casualness is by design, and so are the three experiences offered at this tasting-menu-only establishment. Everything—from the friendly staff who show a photographic recall of faces and names, to the whimsical murals and faux-sheepskin seat covers, to the double-open-sided kitchen—is meant to build trust between the chef composing the meal and the person enjoying it. That trust is important, because the eight-course tasting menu ($95) can be imposing and push conventional flavor profiles. It's a route to work up to rather than begin with.

Before you even see a menu, you'll be greeted with a complimentary glass of sparkling wine by sommelier Paige Farrell, formerly of Menton. If you plan on experiencing the experimental trajectory between the menus, start with the approachable three-course version ($45). Changed more often than the five- ($70) and eight-course options, on one night the trio included a bacon and boiled-egg spinach salad, followed by confit duck over potato latkes and a delicious sliver of coconut cream pie. It's the kind of New American meal prepared in many neighborhoods these days, and for $45, you'll leave satisfyingly full. The salad's light balsamic vinaigrette was a bright palate-prepper for the rich duck over deep-fried potatoes. The coconut cream pie was a gorgeously presented long sliver of custard, whipped cream and toasted coconut over a graham cracker crust. Sweet but not cloying, it was a respectable ending to the equivalent of a three-and-a-half star meal elsewhere.

If Asta were reviewed on its five-course menu alone, the restaurant would easily earn five stars From the first course, a risotto made from carrot painstakingly cut to resemble Arborio grains, to the last, an apple cake with caramelized white chocolate atop a cheddar sauce, the menu showcased technique without compromising taste. Flavors sinuously flowed from one course into another. The sweetness of the carrots found an echo in scallops elegantly filleted into lengths like unfurled wrapping paper across beet faro and pickled blueberries. The third and fourth courses moved into more savory dimensions, with braised celery, black garlic gnocchi and crunchy chicken skin presaging the earthiness of lamb, onions, and dried olives.

Where the five-course menu was a masterful balancing act of familiar and novel, the eight-course menu ventured into the overly conceptual. "After the storm" was arranged to resemble detritus on a beach—bright green seaweed pasta entwined with fried red dulse and dotted with salmon roe and mussel foam. "Anticipation of spring" was a version of chicken soup with broth poured tableside over popcorn powder to mimic melting snow. The technical, performative aspects of both dishes were more memorable than the actual taste. The most disconcerting course was the seventh: A pre-dessert citrus salad meant to be a refreshing, bright dish proved inedible for its extremely sour and bitter taste, especially when paired with its wine-tasting counterpart, a vinegary kombucha. Crabb is clearly fearless about experimenting, but there's an intellectual coldness to the eight courses not present in the other menus, which may be why there's so much emphasis on creating trust with service.

Kitchen staff routinely stop what they're doing to march out and present their dishes. It's another example of personalizing the experience of dining, making customers, no matter the path they choose, how loud they are or what they wear, feel special and motivated to return. Judging from the rave neighborhood response, trust issues aren't a problem. ✖✖✖

Q: I HAVE BAGS UNDER MY EYES THAT MAKE ME LOOK OLD AND TIRED. HELP!

A: This is a very common concern for men and women. Bags under the eyes can be removed through a cosmetic surgical procedure called blepharoplasty. The goal is to look natural and to look like yourself, but more alert and refreshed.

This one-hour procedure is performed under local anesthesia, there is minimal discomfort, and the recovery time is 7 to 10 days. During this time you will feel fine and can drive, shop, and maintain normal activities. However, you will initially want to wear dark glasses outside of the house because there will be some swelling and bruising around the eyes for a few days.

I invite you to come into SkinHealth for a free consultation with Dr. Daniel Townsend, an ophthalmic plastic surgeon who has successfully performed over 10,000 of these procedures.

BUMPY RIDE

Derek Cianfrance's cops-and-robbers flick has trouble finding solid ground.

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★½☆
Starring Ryan Gosling, Bradley Cooper, Eva Mendes, Rose Byrne, Ben Mendelsohn and Ray Liotta. Written by Derek Cianfrance, Ben Coccio and Darius Marder. Directed by Derek Cianfrance. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

AN ACT OF VIOLENCE ripples down through generations in Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine. Though technically Cianfrance's third feature (his first, 1998's Brother Tied, remains unreleased due to rights issues), The Place Beyond the Pines has all the hallmarks of a sophomore effort. It's precisely the kind of picture a young filmmaker directs after an early success, when he feels encouraged to swing for the fences.

Blue Valentine zeroed in with a laser focus on two characters going through a breakup so painful that the movie, though it may be brilliant, is something that I never, ever want to see again. But The Place Beyond the Pines is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and occasional pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters.

The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider, eking out a meager living (that presumably pays for his countless tattoos) by performing in county fairs. One summer he returns to Schenectady, N.Y., where he learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (a deglammed Eva Mendes) resulted in a child.

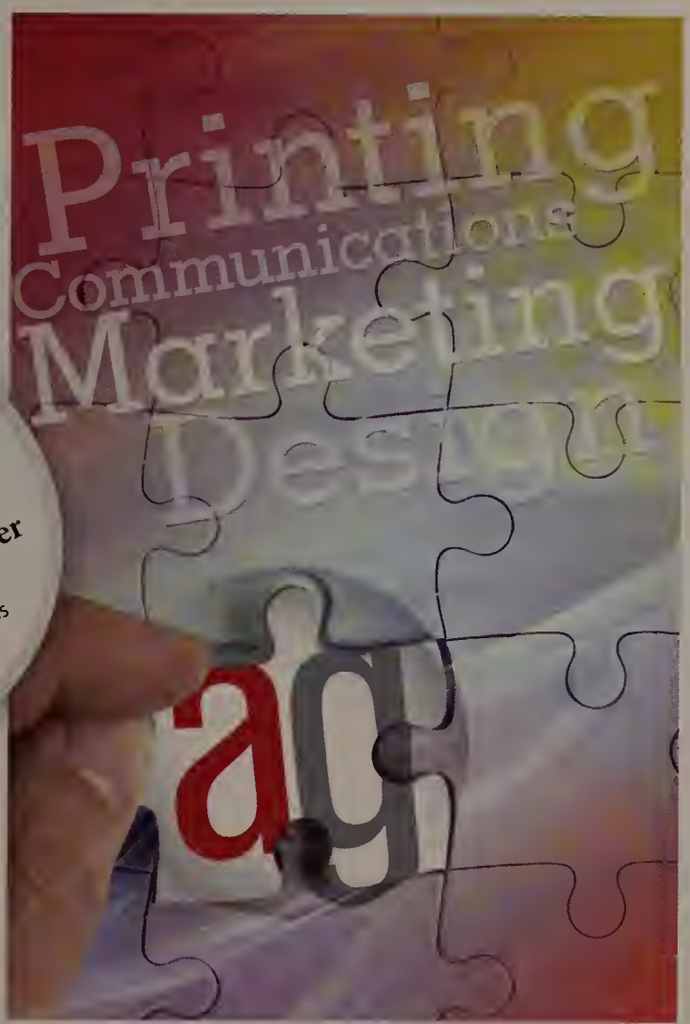
She doesn't want anything to do with him, for good reasons. He's got a quick temper, limited social skills and no prospects, and only the fact that he looks like Ryan Gosling makes it believable that there'd be any baby-making going on in the first place. But now he's suddenly flushed with a sense of parental responsibility, feeling obligated to provide for this kid the only way he knows how—by robbing banks.

Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper costars as the prodigal son of a locally revered state Supreme Court judge. He recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. He's looking for something less morally compromised than local politics, but such true-blue idealism quickly falls by the wayside when Ray Liotta is on your squad.

Liotta is barely in 20 minutes of The Place Beyond the Pines and winds up walking away with the entire film in his back pocket. Cianfrance plays up the actor's unnerving energy, letting that dead-eyed stare vibrate through an otherwise jovial dinner scene. Cooper's poor schmuck thought he could join the police force to get away from corruption, and now look who just came to dinner.

These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There's a thunderous score by Faith No More's Mike Patton that basically grabs you by the lapels and shakes you into accepting that this is an important movie about weighty issues.

Which is too bad, because that's pretty much the opposite of Cianfrance's strengths. As Blue Valentine proved, he's fascinated by watching actors behave and excels at a lower-class naturalism that never feels phony. The quiet, day-to-day scenes in The Place Beyond the Pines are extraordinary, with a gritty, lived-in feel to the dead-end settings and banal interactions. (Between this and Charlie Kaufman's Synecdoche, New York, the city should probably sue Hollywood for defamation.)



Gosling once again proves that he's the most captivatingly mannered actor around, half-smirking his way through a baby-faced Steve McQueen riff and toying with props as if they're strange, foreign objects he just discovered. I'm still not sure how Gosling's schtick even works, yet I can never take my eyes off him. But the real surprise here is Bradley Cooper, who usually plays such a slick douchebag that he makes the entire theater stink of Axe body spray. He's never looked so young in a movie, so helpless and unguarded. Over time he'll fully flower into the smarmy Bradley Cooper we know so well, but the process of getting there is fascinating.

There are many wonderful moments in The Place Beyond the Pines, and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a perfectly fine sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Derek Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. ×××

STREET SPIRIT

New York upstarts bring homespun hootenanny to younger crowds inspired to sing along.

Spirit Family Reunion
plays the Sinclair on April 5.

WHEN THE MEMBERS of Spirit Family Reunion circle a single microphone on acoustic guitar, banjo, fiddle, upright bass, washboard and parade drum, an audience might expect to hear traditional tunes from the bluegrass, gospel, folk or old-timey archives. Those styles are all in there, but they're mixed into fresh, heartfelt original songs that the young Brooklyn band has brought to life for their own generation.

"When we play with the real traditional people, they say, 'You guys are not traditional at all,'" says lead singer/guitarist Nick Panken, 26. "But at a place like Newport [Folk Festival], we may stick out like a sore thumb, being traditional as opposed to the rock bands with just a glint of roots in their sound."

Spirit Family Reunion soared on one of Newport's side stages last year and returns to that fest on July 28, though Panken's wary of large stages, including one the band just played on in Rochester, N.Y. "My feet were at the same height as the people's chins, and I just find that too high," Panken recalls. "Maybe it's better for sightlines to have the band higher up if you're in the last row, but I always feel better when we're a little lower down and more on an equal level with anyone."

Spirit Family Reunion grew accustomed to that setting, having honed its chops in the streets and subways of New York and in small bars. "You definitely make more money playing out on the street," Panken says. "We didn't have an audience, so we went to where the audience was."

Panken, banjo player Maggie Carson and washboard player Stephen Weinheimer met at the Beacon School, an alternative public high school in Manhattan. Carson was drawn to clawhammer banjo and indie bands using the instrument for texture, while Weinheimer favored punk, and Panken listened to the likes of Woody Guthrie, Lead Belly, Bruce Springsteen and the Rolling Stones.

"When you're younger, you tend to be a little more fascinated with what's flashy and big and bombastic, and that was more on the Rolling Stones side," Panken says. "But when you want to play on the street and aren't able to book a show and you don't have a lot of equipment, you gravitate toward the bare-bones or older stuff, and there's a great traditional music scene in New York City now."

With the addition of fiddler Mat Davidson, bassist Ken Woodward and drummer Pete Pezzimenti, Spirit Family Reunion embraced that acoustic wave. "Growing up in America, you hear the banjo and certain songs that you don't even realize are important songs in the heritage," Panken says. "When you hear the banjo years later, your ears perk up, and you say, 'Oh, I remember that!'"

When it comes to writing songs in the tradition of American icons, he says, "I never try to model a song after anybody, but I do find it helpful to ask, 'What would Hank Williams or Woody Guthrie do?' And generally, the answer is the most obvious and straightforward one."

One can hear shades of Hank Williams in the "hallelujah"-laced stomp of Spirit Family Reunion's "I Am Following the Sound," which joins "I Want to Be Relieved" among crowd favorites, balancing lonesome contemplations like "Sorrow I've Known" and "On My Mind" on the group's self-released 2012 album, No Separation. "I tend to come up with the basic [song] ideas, but it doesn't sound right until everybody makes their contribution," he says. "Our sound is what we sound like when the six of us get together."

Ideally, the experience goes beyond band members, who sell songbooks with lyrics and chords. "You feel better when there are more people singing," says Panken, whose sextet plays the Sinclair on April 5. "It's an honest attempt to have fun and to play our music and encourage people to dance and sing along with us if they feel like it. Maybe we'll fail, but we're going to give it our best effort and break a sweat." ×××

TIERS OF SHAME

Am I ready for Equinox gym's Tier 4 program?

Beefing up

EVERY ONCE IN A WHILE I chronicle one of my valiant attempts to get rid of my gut. Like many wannabe gut-losers, I embark on each new effort with the utmost fervor, which gradually lapses into occasional enthusiasm and then the stasis of ingrained habit—run three miles, go lift some weights, pretend that the elliptical machine does anything. And then spend the summer avoiding sitting down at the beach, because that's just a tough look.

So when Equinox invited me in for something called a Tier 4 assessment, I thought that sounded great, and then spent several months making excuses to avoid it. Do you know how many calories you burn making excuses? No, you don't. But Equinox probably does.

When I finally drag myself into Equinox, the first thing I notice is that there are no overweight trainers. That's good, because fat trainers are always a red flag. In fact, Equinox doesn't appear to have any pudgy customers, either. My friend Greg is an Equinox member, and when I asked him about the preponderance of trim specimens up in there, he posited a theory: "Equinox is more expensive than other gyms," he said. "Since it's more expensive, the members usually have great jobs. In most cases, you need to be smart to have a great job. Smart people are probably in better shape than people who aren't smart." I suspect Greg wouldn't fare well in the Planet Fitness Judgment-free Zone.

Two trainers named Brandon and Jason usher me into an office for the first part of my Tier 4 assessment. Later, they'll evaluat my movement, body-fat composition and cardio function, but first we'll measure rest ing metabolic rate. This involves sitting ver still for 15 minutes. I don't want to brag, but I'm pretty good at sitting. Your move, Equinox.

Jason straps a mask on my face that looks like something Hannibal the Cannibal might wear while playing racquetball. Tubes protrude from the mask's snorkel and funne my breath into a machine that hums and clicks while analyzing my exhalations. That machine eventually spits out the information that'll either change my life or derail it the number of calories that I need per day to sustain basic functions. I figure it'll be around 2,000 calories. Industry standard.

Jason and Brandon don't immediately reveal my RMR, shuttling me through the other tests. I'm on the high side of normal for body fat, I exhibit decent movement and I tend to sprint on the treadmill in the vicinity of attractive women while wearing my cannibal mask. Move along, ladies. Nothing to see here except a guy on a treadmill who looks like he just escaped from the gimp in Zed's basement.

Normally, Equinox processes all the info gleaned from the tests and then provides a big presentation on how to fix your flabby life. But I'm impatient, so they dig right in with some initial results. To my great amazement the Equinox computers say that I should eat more. A lot more.

"Your resting metabolic rate is 3,024 calories," Jason says. "That's what you need if you don't exercise." While I may have exaggerated my nutritional virtuousness on an Equinox questionnaire (yes, skinless chicken and steamed veggies are dinner for me!), there's no way that I consume 3,000 calories a day. So why the gut, then? "Your body thinks you're starving, so it's hoarding fat," Jason says. Another trainer, adds, "We saw a guy like this recently who was skinny-fat. We got him eating more and he dropped eight pounds pretty quick."

"Ha, silly skinny-fat guy," I think, before realizing that I must fit that definition, too. You know, somebody said your brain doesn't function properly if you don't get enough calories. I forget who said that. But it was Equinox.

Of all the ideas to come out of this high-tech fitness jam session, the last thing I expected to be told was to eat more. You know those skinny people who seem to eat all the time and never gain weight? I've always resented those horrible mutants, and now Equinox is telling me that I am one. That's so great that I really don't believe it. I feel like my friends gave me one of those fake winning lottery tickets and they're just letting me run around screaming for joy before telling me I'm a moron. Incidentally, you can tell nobody's ever given me one of those tickets because I'm not in prison for super-aggravated assault.

Despite my doubts, I've embarked on my new tons o' food diet while embracing Equinox's workout plan. This is either going to be the best thing ever or a giant catastrophe where I end up morbidly obese, sweating Buffalo wing sauce and wondering where I went wrong. I'll let you know in a few months. Now pass the butter. ×××

Soroff On JILL McCORKLE

The novelist talks about the writing process, memory and going out on a limb.

BEST-SELLING, AWARD-WINNING WRITER JILL McCORKLE, 55, HAS just published Life After Life, her first novel in 17 years. A native of Lumberton, N.C., in 1984 she earned the distinction of having her first two novels published on the same day. Since then, she's published three others and four collections of short stories. McCorkle taught creative writing at Tufts and Brandeis universities and was a Briggs-Copeland lecturer in fiction at Harvard for five years, where she also chaired the creative writing department. She's won the New England Booksellers Award and the John Dos Passos Prize. Five of her works have been named New York Times notable books. She currently teaches at North Carolina State University and lives in Hillsborough, N.C.

Jonathan Soroff: Seventeen years between novels? What gives?
Jill McCorkle: I've been working, writing short stories and essays. But there were lots of life transitions that prevented me from having the big block of time I needed to work on a novel uninterrupted.

In Life After Life, I love the character who's feigning dementia to get away from his son.
I have to give my son credit for that. When he was a teenager, he really got into the World Wrestling Federation. I realized you could really put off a good chunk of society if you walked around in spandex shouting obscenities at people.

Did you research the retirement home where the novel takes place?
My mother is in a nursing home now. A lot of very funny things get said, and I can't get to my car fast enough to write them down. But I've always been very drawn to old people. I'm not sure why.

Is there a new drama there every day?
I'll tell you something that happened with my mother recently. I found her sitting with some other ladies, and I mentioned that I'd brought her two sweaters and two bras. When I said the word "bra," my mother looked horrified and told me I shouldn't ever use that word in front of other people. So I said, "You'll really like these. They're soft, and they go over your head." And one of the other ladies said, "Over her head? They're supposed to go over her titties!" Everyone just broke out laughing.

Is it difficult for you to write male characters?
It is. For a long time, I was afraid to even venture there. But if you get the emotional truth of a story, you can be any gender or any age. It takes getting to that place.

Do you have any writing superstitions?
Yeah. I have all these mini-lights in a non-working fireplace where I write, and I'm kinda big on those. I usually light a candle.

Ever get writer's block?
No. I think of writer's block as a luxury because you'd need to have a whole lotta time to write to dry up like that. Right now, I worry that I can't possibly live long enough to get to all the scraps of ideas I've stored away.

Thing you miss most about living in Boston?
Snow! Somewhere in another life I think I was someone's Russian grandmother because every night I check the weather in Moscow and in Boston.

Do you think writing well can be taught?
My answer is twofold. It's like any other endeavor. You can learn the mechanics, and practice in anything is key, but then there's that indefinable something that kicks in with good writing, and that I don't think can be taught.

A characteristic great writers share?
The courage to go in a direction creatively where you're totally vulnerable and don't feel safe. The desire to experiment. Eudora Welty talked about going as far out on a limb as you can without it snapping.

Three authors you'd love to have at a party?
Tennessee Williams, Carson McCullers—and Thornton Wilder because they could probably loosen him up.

Is poetry harder to write than prose?
I have a deep reverence for it. I'm probably misquoting, but I think it was William Faulkner who said, "We all want to write poetry, and then we fail. So we write short stories, and then we fail. So we write novels." But I do think the smaller the space, the greater the challenge.

Do you interact with your characters when you're writing?
That's part of the reason it's been 17 years since my last novel. My children are now in their 20s, but your family doesn't really like it when you say, "Yes, it's a beautiful day, but I'm going to close myself into the other room and enjoy what I'm thinking about." With a short story, I find it easier to come and go. It just feels more portable.

Which comes first: plot or characters?
Usually the characters.

Greatest inspiration?
Probably memory. Maybe that's why this novel is about people who are losing theirs.

Do you read reviews?
I do. At one point I stopped reading my student evaluations because you could get 30 that were glowing, and then there'd be that one that just wrecked your Christmas vacation.

Do you identify with so-called Southern writers like Welty or Faulkner?
If my name gets mentioned in the same breath as someone like them, I'm proud. The only time those categorizations get in the way is if there's the assumption that you'd only be of interest to a Southerner.

Biggest difference between Southern writing and other American literary traditions?
After all my years teaching in New England, I came to see those differences as more urban/rural than North/South. Growing up in a small town in Maine might produce a very similar perspective and experience to what I had.

One book you'd bring to a deserted island?
Can I say something like Proust, so I'd have lots of volumes? Or someone like Tolstoy. ×××

Major TALENT

TO BECOME THE RED SOX STAR PITCHER,
CLAY BUCHHOLZ NEEDED MORE THAN INNATE ATHLETICISM.

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY
PHOTOGRAPHED BY KERRY BRETT

EVERY TOWN in America has the NATURAL.

YOU MAY REMEMBER HIM FROM HIGH SCHOOL: He's so athletically gifted that he's able to grasp any sport without seeming to break a sweat. What used to be a big deal—a nice story about him in the newspaper, a visit from a college recruiter—suddenly becomes routine because of his talent. It's a talent that brings 24-hour hyperbole out of journalists and lofty promises from coaches.

HE'S A PHENOM, AND YOU'RE FAMILIAR WITH HIS PROFILE. THAT IS, UNTIL HE DOESN'T FIND SUCCESS. WHEN THE STORIES AREN'T AS FLATTERING AS THEY USED TO BE. WHEN THE COACHES DON'T PROMISE HIM A THING AND, INSTEAD, TELL HIM THAT HE'S GOING TO HAVE TO FIGURE THINGS OUT HIMSELF IF HE WANTS TO BE GREAT AGAIN.

Clay Buchholz is 28 years old now. He can no longer be described as a tall, skinny kid from Texas, the Natural of Lumberton. He's 30 pounds heavier than the high-schooler who nearly got himself a scholarship to play big-time college football, although he was just interested in baseball. He doesn't seem to be as carefree as he was at 22. That summer, he won the first major league game he ever started for the Red Sox. Two weeks later, in his second start, he threw a no-hitter. The team went on to win the World Series in the fall, and it took some real digging to find even a Yankees fan who couldn't see the radiant future of Buchholz and the Red Sox.

The instant success made sense for Buchholz. Back in high school, during his junior year, he saw a group of football players running the 40-yard dash, and he decided to run with them. He was so fast that he easily separated himself from the pack, which led his cousin to breathlessly report to Clay's father, Skip, "Clay's on the football field running 40s!" This was not good news for Skip Buchholz, who knew just how skilled his 16-year-old son was. The kid was 6'2", 160 pounds. Why on earth would his dad want him risking his professional baseball career on a football field?

That's exactly what Skip told the football coach when he marched into his office. The coach said he planned to use Clay strictly as a fast receiver who'd run up and down the sidelines, keeping him away from the middle of the field with its heavy traffic and jarring collisions. Even with those restrictions in how he played, not to mention his lack of full emotional investment in the sport, Buchholz drew interest from Wisconsin, Hawaii and Texas. He played against fast guys like 2016 Olympic hopeful Ivory Williams (who once ran the 100 meters in fewer than 10 seconds). But football wasn't the sport for him.

"I WENT TO ONE COLLEGE FOOTBALL GAME, AT TEXAS TECH, AND I SAW HOW BIG THOSE GUYS WERE," HE SAYS WITH A LAUGH. "I WAS BARELY 160 POUNDS. PLUS, I HAD WORKED TOO HARD AT BASEBALL TO CHANGE DIRECTIONS AT THAT POINT."

"I went to one college football game, at Texas Tech, and I saw how big those guys were," he says with a laugh. "I was barely 160 pounds. Plus, I had worked too hard at baseball to change directions at that point."

Buchholz worked hard enough at baseball to eventually turn himself into a Red Sox first-round pick in 2005. He didn't get as much attention, initially, as a couple other members of his Boston draft class. The team's first pick was the equally athletic Jacoby Ellsbury, a dynamic outfielder. The next selection was Craig Hansen, a pitcher who was thought to be a top 10 talent, and who slipped to the Red Sox because other teams didn't want to meet his high financial demands. Later in the round, Buchholz was taken, and he immediately dominated the hitters he faced in the minor leagues.

Appropriately, he was on the fast track. Just two years after being drafted, he was in Boston. There was a divot in the track, though, and it became obvious in 2008. The

ON THE FIELD, THE QUESTION IS NO LONGER IF HE CAN MAKE IT. EVERYONE KNOWS HE CAN. NOW HE'S BEING COUNTED ON TO BE ELITE.

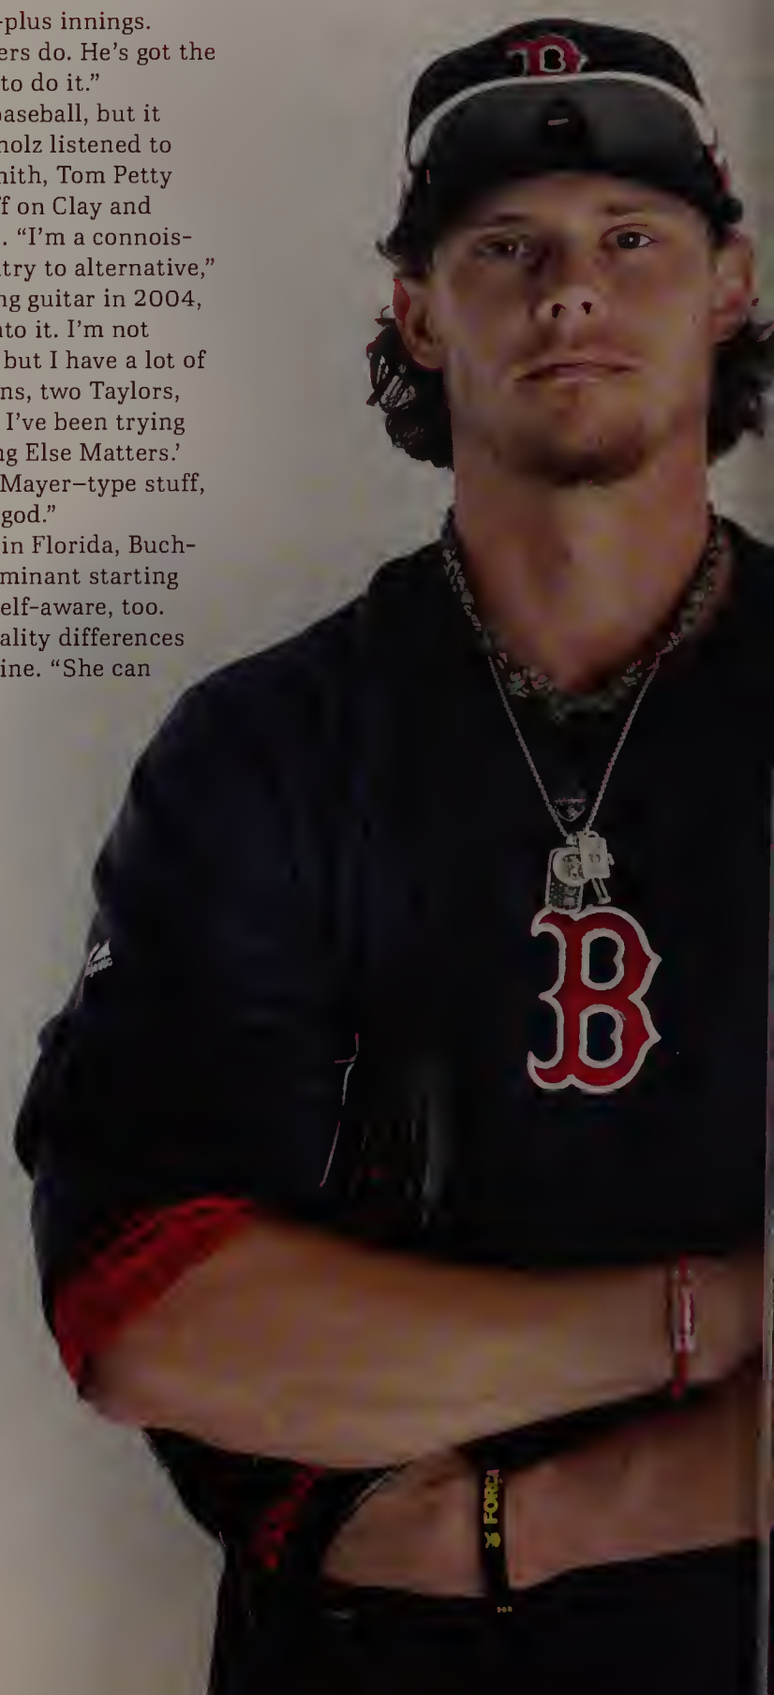
Natural had been so good in the minors that he had been able to get hitters out without stretching his limits. In the majors, starting in 2008, smart and talented hitters began to adjust to what Buchholz was doing. They didn't take the bait on most of his pitches and simply waited for him to throw fastballs. When he threw them, they crushed them.

To regroup, the Red Sox sent him back to the minors. They didn't just send him back with instructions to work out of a slump. They were more specific: They told him that he'd have to change his style of pitching. The request isn't unusual for a star in his early 30s, who's lost velocity on his blazing fastball and has to learn to use other pitches. But Buchholz was just 23. He was being told to change his psychology. Instead of using his fastball as a swing-and-miss pitch, he was told to "sink" the ball, have batters hit it on the ground, and trust that the ball would go safely into the gloves of his teammates. He made the switch and quickly found himself back in Boston. In 2010, he was one of the best pitchers in the league again and finished sixth in voting for the Cy Young Award.



Now, at 28, he has a new challenge. Many of the exceptional athletes he saw in high school have long since traded in their sports dreams for traditional jobs with traditional uniforms (dark blue suit, white shirt, power tie). One guy in his Red Sox draft class, Hansen, flamed out around the same time Buchholz reinvented himself. Another, Michael Bowden, has had a couple successful big-league cameos but still hasn't thrown 100 innings in his career. Buchholz is married now to TV model Lindsay Clubine. The couple have a two-and-a-half-year-old daughter, Colbi, and are expecting their second child in September. On the field, the question is no longer if he can make it. Everyone knows he can. Now he's being counted on to be elite.

"He's a really smart pitcher," Red Sox general manager Ben Cherington says. "He's very creative. He's already proven that he can be exactly who we need him to be. There are certain markers that the top pitchers have: 30-plus starts, 200-plus innings. That's what the best starters do. He's got the physical and mental tools to do it."

His creativity helps in baseball, but it goes beyond it. Skip Buchholz listened to enough Van Halen, Aerosmith, Tom Petty and Hall & Oates to rub off on Clay and pique an interest in music. "I'm a connoisseur. I go from rap to country to alternative," Clay says. "I started playing guitar in 2004, and really started to get into it. I'm not Jimi Hendrix or anything, but I have a lot of guitars. I've got two Gibsons, two Taylors, two electrics, an acoustic. I've been trying to play Metallica's 'Nothing Else Matters.' I'd like to play some John Mayer–type stuff, because he's sort of like a god."

After finishing training in Florida, Buchholz looks the part of a dominant starting pitcher. He sounds more self-aware, too. He jokes about the personality differences between himself and Clubine. "She can meet a total stranger and talk to them for three-and-a-half hours," he says. "She's really a people person, used to the limelight. I'm the opposite. I tend to be more of a recluse. But put us together, and it works."

It's not uncommon to see Buchholz in the clubhouse playing his guitar. He's much more appreciative of talent these days, his and anyone else's. "Sometimes, in baseball, the really talented people make the game look easy," he says. "Look at [Yankees second baseman] Robinson Cano. Everything he does looks easy. But it's not. If it was that easy, there'd be more than 750 people who can do it in the big leagues." ×××

A BRIEF COMPENDIUM OF REASONS TO BE OPTIMISTIC ABOUT THE 2013 BOSTON RED SOX

BY EZRA DYER

IF YOU HAVEN'T KEPT UP
with your Red Sox news,
LET ME BRING YOU UP TO SPEED.

Pitcher Drake Britton was arrested for DUI after police clocked him at 111 mph. First-round pick Bryce Brentz shot himself in the leg while cleaning his gun. Former prospect Ryan Westmoreland retired after multiple brain surgeries. And Alfredo Aceves gleefully joined a fight—and got enthusiastically punched—at the World Baseball Classic. "I think I saw Satan in his eyes," commented Canadian coach Larry Walker. This is our spring thus far. Perhaps we should issue a Fenway press pass for TMZ.

BUT IT'S NOT ALL DEVIL EYES AND GUNSHOT WOUNDS. THERE ARE REASONS TO BE OPTIMISTIC ABOUT THE 2013 RED SOX. NO, SERIOUSLY. BEAR WITH ME, AND I'LL EXPLAIN.

JOHN FARRELL

HOPE IS SO LOW THAT ANY SUCCESS WILL BE A PLEASANT SURPRISE

As someone who grew up watching the Red Sox in the '80s and '90s, the rolling catastrophes of the past two years feel almost like a return to form. I'm not saying that I enjoy losing, but there's something to be said for lowering expectations. To summarize the great philosopher Donald Trump, "The owners of sports franchises are a miserable bunch because only one team can win each year." You're basically guaranteed disappointment, from the top brass down to the kids in the cheap seats. Thus, you'll end up less morose if you confront these stacked odds with an air of resignation.

Consider the Patriots—every year it kills us when they don't win the Super Bowl because we know that if things went a little differently, they could've taken home the Lombardi Trophy. But the past two years have progressively disabused us of the idea that the Red Sox are automatically penciled in for a postseason berth. Last year, the Sox went 69-93 despite great predictions and a roster full of stars. This year, instead of howling in despondence if the Sox get eliminated in the ALCS, we'll be pleasantly surprised if they make the playoffs at all. And making the playoffs is a lot easier than reaching the World Series. (Notice how I didn't say, "winning the World Series"? Expectations!) Thus, the painful misadventures of the past two years have actually improved our odds of happiness. Hey, it beats being a Tigers fan.

THE FAIR-WEATHER FANS ARE GONE

And good riddance. Now you can actually get a ticket and enjoy a game without ransoming your children to Rumpelstiltskin (in the modern telling, he's a scalper who lives under a bridge on Ipswich Street).

EITHER YOU'VE GOT THE PLAYERS OR YOU DON'T, AND SHREWD MANIPULATION OF THE LINEUP CARD WILL ONLY GET YOU SO FAR.

Red Sox COO Sam Kennedy admits that the vaunted Fenway sellout streak (which the Sox date to May 15, 2003) is finished, saying, "Given the disastrous 2011 and then the even more disastrous 2012 [seasons], it's understandable." Like tulip prices, Internet stocks and the housing market, it appears the bubble for Red Sox bleacher seats has burst.

In an admittedly unscientific experiment, I went to the Red Sox website and plugged in a random Friday night game in May: four tickets, please, best seats available. This is the kind of endeavor that, just a few years ago, would've resulted in a message to the effect of, "Have you checked out the Baseball Tavern roof deck? It's the next best thing to being there!" This time, I found four loge tickets, third-base side, for face value, which is to say, less than scalpers used to charge for the meanest of bleacher seats circa 2008.

Better yet, when I tried the same thing for the worst tickets available—$22 upper bleachers—four more tickets popped up onscreen. Depending on your appetite for concessions, it might once again be feasible for a family to have a night at Fenway for around $100. This is the difference between baseball as an experience and baseball as an event. For the past decade, the constant hype surrounding the Red Sox attracted a constituency that couldn't care less about baseball but wanted to feel like part of a cultural moment. That moment is over—for now. Hallelujah, and pass me a Fenway Frank.

PAPI

A few years ago, every Papi swing was analyzed for signs of his imminent physical decay. Now he's at the point where we can just enjoy him and not get too upset if he misses a few games with a bum hammy.

It's also refreshing that amidst all the infighting and whining of the past few years, Ortiz has stayed above the fray. He's the new Varitek, the veteran player who's been around long enough not to hold a press conference every time he gets told to drop a bunt against his wishes. Plus, dude can still hit. Papi only played 90 games last year and still clubbed 23 homers with 60 RBI. If he can resume that level of performance, then the fact that he's our lone remaining talisman from 2004 is just a bonus.

JOHN FARRELL

OK, it's silly to place too much significance on a new manager. Sure, managers are important, but the wisest, most beloved guru in the majors can't put any extra spin on a curve heading for Mark Teixeira's wheelhouse. Either you've got the players or you don't, and shrewd manipulation of the lineup card will only get you so far.

That said, Bobby Valentine couldn't have worked out any worse. Good grief. You know a managerial term hasn't gone well when it prompts the guy to quit Twitter for nearly seven months before resurfacing with photos of strange sushi bars in Japan. Hopefully Farrell, the former Red Sox pitching coach, has a better grip on executing baseball strategy while projecting tough-dad discipline on an unruly band of young millionaires. In the meantime, we're glad Bobby V found some crazy maki rolls.

THE UNKNOWNS OF THE MOUND

In scientific jargon there are known unknowns, unknown unknowns and major league closers—the biggest unknowns of all. Closers may not look like the same guy from year to year, never mind when they switch teams (and leagues). Newly minted Sox closer Joel Hanrahan arrived from the Pirates, and he could throw like early Papelbon, late Foulke or middle Gagne. We just don't know—because he's a closer. Meanwhile, the Sox have Allen Webster bringing 97-mph heat and Rubby De La Rosa aching to prove his Tommy John surgery was just a detour on the path to ace-pitcher stardom. While we don't know whether those guys will make it to the Show this season, we do know who taught Rubby his changeup: A guy by the name of Pedro Martinez. And that's nice to know.

WE HAVE A ROTATION!

Lester, Buchholz, Lackey, Dempster, Doubront. There are your starting five, if not necessarily in that order. If we've learned one thing in recent seasons, it's that success abhors rotation uncertainty. Sure, you can tinker with the setup guys and middle relievers, but starters don't cotton to a play-it-by-ear approach. Ask Daniel Bard, who wasn't a starter. Then was. Now isn't. There's only one guy who can straddle those worlds, and his name is Tim Wakefield, and he's retired to tend his ranch for aged manatees on the Florida panhandle (or so we imagine).

CHERINGTON BLEW IT UP

Around this time last year, we wrote, "We really can't speculate about how aggressively Cherington will remix his roster with major trades (it might depend on how often he hangs out with Danny Ainge)." Well, apparently Cherington and Ainge became besties, because the Dodgers are now proud owners of a massive 10-figure chunk of the Red Sox payroll. It hurt to lose Adrian Gonzalez, but Josh Beckett was clearly done with Boston, and the Carl Crawford signing was a historic boondoggle.

If there's a giant reset button in the Red Sox front office, then Cherington broke the glass and pushed it. Sour realities were replaced with sweet possibilities. Sometimes trades aren't about what you get, but what you discard. It's like a controlled burn—the forest looks charred and lifeless at first, but it'll eventually grow back healthier than it was before. At least, that's the idea.

ELLSBURY'S IN A CONTRACT YEAR

Here's the deal: If Ellsbury can't regain his 2011 mojo, then so be it. If he does, then we have to pay him more to re-sign. But given the wonderful largesse of the Dodgers (see above), the Red Sox will have some dough to spend, should his season warrant the outlay. But with Jackie Bradley Jr.—the team's number-two prospect—developing in the farm system, the pressure is on Ellsbury, not the team.

IT'S 2004, NOT 2007

Back in April 2004, nobody was saying, "You know who the make-or-break player on this team is? Dave Roberts." In fact, Dave Roberts wasn't even part of the Red Sox organization that spring. At this point, you don't know whom we'll trade for, and you don't know which seemingly unremarkable players will emerge as stars. Boston is funny like that—it's often a baseball bizzaro world where castoffs become heroes (Mike Lowell, Ortiz), and superstars implode (too many to name, but let's just go with Crawford). That was the beauty of 2004—besides the slaking of a historic dry spell, that team was blessedly free from the curse of inevitability. There was nothing preordained about their path to a title. Contrast that with 2007, when the team was so stacked that everyone expected a title from Game One. A title is a title, but a win is sweeter when it relies on a dash of serendipity.

And if the 2013 Red Sox are to set the good ship Fenway back on course, they're gonna need a sprinkle of 2004-style pixie dust and more than a couple lucky breaks. This might be hard to fathom for the younger citizens of Titletown, but we're the underdogs. Just like old times. ***

UNQUIET RIOT

NOT KNOWING THE difference between a pinot noir and a pinot grigio in a room full of wine buffs may seem a little intimidating to those who haven't brushed up on their booze. But Wine Riot is a tasting that helps develop taste. In four hours, guests can sample from 250 wines from around the world, talk to wine experts and producers and, most importantly, get to know what they like in an approachable environment—without being judged by a bunch of winos. There's even a "like" button on their free mobile app so Rioters can keep track of which wines they love in case there's a desire to stock up later. Get ready to riot on April 5–6 at the Park Plaza Castle.

CHRISTINA GIANNOPOULOS

Wine Riot is on April 5–6 at Park Plaza Castle, $60, 130 Columbus Ave., Boston (800-430-1553) secondglass.com.

Back to the Future

Close to Home Things aren't always black and white. The dramedy Clybourne Park finds the Younger family caught in a struggle of race and real estate, in a story inspired by Lorraine Hansberry's A Raisin in the Sun. Written by Bruce Norris, the play is set in two acts that take place 50 years apart. The plot begins in 1959 as a black family tries to buy a home in an all-white neighborhood. Half a century later, that same neighborhood is now predominantly black, and the community is fighting to fend off gentrification. Winner of London's Olivier Award, the Pulitzer Prize for drama and a Tony Award for best play, see this honored meditation on friends, neighbors and where we call home at the Calderwood Pavilion through March 30.

Not Another Teen Movie

Taming of the Teen

Before Heath Ledger smirked his Cheshire Cat smile in The Dark Knight and Joseph Gordon-Levitt charmed hipster girls with song and dance in (500) Days of Summer, they were high schoolers trying to win a date. 10 Things I Hate About You, a 1999 romantic teen comedy loosely based on Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew, follows social-climbing Bianca Stratford and her feminist older sister, Kat. Cameron James (Levitt) hatches a plan to woo Bianca, who's desperate for courtship but banned from boys until Kat dates—an unlikely prospect because of her angry reputation. After a mysterious Australian student (Ledger) is bribed to court the shrewish Kat, mishaps ensue, hearts are broken and girls get serenaded. Watch the quartet's love-hate relationships at the Coolidge Corner Theatre March 29–30.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Dead Man Down ★★ ½ This uniquely atonal disaster, directed by The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo's Niels Arden Oplev, is obviously a terrible movie. But it's a terrible movie I had an absolute blast watching. Colin Farrell stars as a Hungarian widower seeking vengeance on Terrence Howard's gang of slumlords through one of the more preposterously convoluted revenge plots in cinematic history. But his plans are briefly interrupted when nosy neighbor Noomi Rapace takes an iPhone video of him strangling one of Howard's henchmen and then tries to blackmail him into murdering the drunk driver who disfigured her in a car crash. Naturally, they fall in love. Oplev plays all this kitsch with such somber art house solemnity that it's inadvertently hilarious, and the hambone supporting turns from F. Murray Abraham and Isabelle Huppert suggest they're in on a joke nobody else is getting. Cartoonishly over-the-top action sequences battle for screen time with moody psychodrama, and the movie's New York City is such a geographic mishmash that the incongruity of the locales becomes surreal. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Good Day to Die Hard ★ ½ The fifth and sorriest installment of the now 25-year-old franchise is so far removed from the excellent original that it should be called Die Hard in Name Only. Bruce Willis' New York cop John McClane, who, once upon a time, was vulnerable and charismatic, is now a bulletproof, sleepwalking bully, bulldozing his way through Russia, where his estranged son (Jai Courtney) is supposedly on trial for murder. After a prison-break car chase that occupies practically a third of the movie, we find out the kid is actually an undercover CIA agent, so he and his dear old dad spend the rest of the picture bickering about their family issues while being shot at by helicopters and jumping off exploding buildings, all without breaking a sweat. A Good Day to Die Hard is dumb, noisy and barely has enough story to support the 97 minutes of one-note cacophony. Willis snoozes along like a bored jerk. We're a long way from Nakatomi Plaza. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At West Newton.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (In the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Lore ★★★ ½ I guess I never stopped to wonder what happened to all those cuties in the Hitler Youth after their parents lost the war. This tough-minded, visceral picture from Australian director Cate Shortland follows a gaggle of stern Aryan kids abandoned after their S.S. officer parents are taken away by the Allies. We see all this through the eyes of the eldest, Hannalore, played with a sharp edge by Saskia Rosendahl. She's left in charge of leading her siblings—including a newborn baby—through the Black Forest to their grandmother's house, and the only help comes from a dashing young Jewish lad, which naturally pits Hannalore's burgeoning sexuality against her deeply ingrained bigotry. Germany immediately after the fall is a deadly maze of looting, violence and desperation, shot in tight, low-angle close-ups to approximate the characters' point of view. Lore is a tough, survivalist fable that stays with you. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

No ★★★ ½ Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer a TV-ad campaign for a referendum vote that just might kick Chile's brutal dictator Augusto Pinochet out of office. While idealists in the various political parties think the airtime should be used to expose Pinochet's atrocities, Bernal's boy wonder sells democracy as a product like any other—with rainbows, jingles, silly comedy sketches and even a mime. No's most cutting gag is just how much these political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good because the people casting votes are generally stupid. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (In the suburbs.)

Spring Breakers ★★★★ The latest outrageous provocation from Trash Humpers auteur Harmony Korine is sort of like what might happen if Jean-Luc Godard directed a Girls Gone Wild video. A toxic barrage of flesh, drugs and oceans of beer, the relatively plotless polemic finds three morally bankrupt college girls (Ashley Benson, Vanessa Hudgens and Rachel Korine) dragging their goody-goody best friend (Selena Gomez, who plays a gal so religious she's actually named Faith) on a mind-numbingly lurid spring break bacchanal. They're bailed out of a jam by James Franco's white rapper Alien—the kind of instantly iconic character every dude in a dorm room is going to be for Halloween this year. Barely recognizable under the cornrows, oversized shades and grills on his teeth, Franco brings a contagious self-delight to his empty-headed machine gun posture. Fetishizing the bikini-clad decadence with sumptuous cinematography, Korine wallows in the junk culture he's excoriating. In other words, the movie has its cake and then eats more cake. Breathtakingly edited in hypnotic patterns of repetition, Spring Breakers is some kind of sicko masterpiece. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Upside Down ★ ½ This visually adventurous, aggressively stupid sci-fi curio from director Juan Solanas stars the ever-charmless Jim Sturgess and a game Kirsten Dunst as a couple of star-crossed lovers living on neighboring planets that orbit in such close proximity that the inhabitants can chat with one another from mountaintops. Solanas hews close to the Romeo and Juliet playbook, positioning his two globes as haves vs. have-nots and trying to work some sort of social commentary into a story that's just plain goofy. Relying so heavily on computer-generated effects that it looks more like a cartoon than a movie, Upside Down doesn't dramatize much of a story. Instead, the characters just stand around in exotically rendered vistas spouting gargantuan globs of exposition at one another. The fact that Sturgess and Dunst are named Adam and Eden probably tells you everything you need to know about the lofty, putrid screenplay. (At Kendall Square.)

Warm Bodies ★★ ½ Working from a popular novel by Isaac Marion, writer/director Jonathan Levine takes an unexpectedly clever spin around some well-trod terrain. Our hero, R (Nicholas Hoult, who'll make you feel very old when you realize he's the kid from About a Boy), is an undead hipster who falls head over heels with Teresa Palmer's feisty heroine, Julie, sometime after the end of the world. It's an awkward courtship, to say the least. But a strange thing happens as he hangs out with her. R stops rotting and starts remembering things. Apparently, love does conquer all, even zombiehood. Marion's book was a riff on Romeo and Juliet (in case the main character's names didn't tip you off), but it's easy to view Levine's adaptation as a devastatingly funny send-up of the Twilight phenomenon. I was at a Barnes & Noble recently and saw an entire section devoted to "teen paranormal romance." Warm Bodies is at its funniest when the film is digging into the messy details of just how such romances might work. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong ripoff. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger

The Old College Try

Hanging on the Telephone

In Admission, Tina Fey plays a Princeton admissions officer who bends the rules for a boy who might be her long-lost son.

Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no-B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Music Edited by Hannah Lott-Schwartz

Christina Chiarvalloti

Mass Reunion

Punk Rocks

They've played such legendary venues as CBGB and the Whisky, but for GarageDogs there's really no place like home. And though the Hough brothers made their way to Boston from Mobile, Ala., in 1996, this is the city where they made a name for themselves—complete with a pure punk sound and unpredictable theatrics. Onstage they've been no strangers to nudity, feather boas, interpretive dance and drag. Once the stars of a Gucci campaign, their historic career also involved a cable show and a brief affair with country music, so there's just no telling what this homecoming will bring. The boys are back in town on March 29 at Johnny D's.

This Whale's Life

You can judge a book by its cover—but only if it's illustrated. Andrew Glass, renowned children's book author and illustrator, brings life to Eric A. Kimmel's Moby Dick: Chasing the Great White Whale. Kimmel's revamp of the story transforms Herman Melville's classic into a wondrous world supported by Glass' vivid oil and pencil artwork. The fluid pages begin with the cover, where the rich blues, murky grays and grisly red eyes breathe new life into the 162-year-old monster. Come face to face with the leviathan at the Danforth Museum of Art through May 26. Emily Tannenbaum

Pipe Dreams

Your smartphone will never be as astute as the human mind, especially the one belonging to pipe-smoking sleuth detective Sherlock Holmes. Inspired by her exploratory essay series for Scientific American, author Maria Konnikova presents a self-help guide to unlocking the deductive talents that propelled Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's investigator to literary (and cinematic) fame. Mastermind: How to Think Like Sherlock Holmes combines contemporary neuroscience with examples from the thrilling world of the beloved investigator to create methods for enhancing your observation skills. Sharpen your wits at the Harvard Book Store on March 28.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

---

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

CHILLING OUT

Baby, It's Cold Outside

Q: What's better than a day without reading or hearing the name Kardashian?

A: Don't Rush the Season, a fund-raiser and clothing drive for Seasonal Dysmorphia Syndrome, held at the Four Seasons.

The ballroom was chockablock with gently used winter clothing to be donated to SDS sufferers (those people who break out the flip-flops and shorts the second the mercury goes over 32 degrees). Among the crowd donating designer furs, last season's Moncler parka and impulse-purchased Uggs were fashion plate Laura Baldini, Saks Fifth Avenue avatar Suhail Kwatra, boldfacer Lisa Pierpont, redheaded thoroughbred Sukey Forbes, Persian beauty Mahsa Noble, the effortlessly stylish Kristina Lyons, slave to fashion Justin Reiss and his hunka-hunka-burnin' love, Mark Schwindenhammer, Baywatch babe Traci Bingham and her main squeeze Devin Hill, both of Boston's answers to Iris Apfel, Doris Yaffe and Marilyn Riseman, the jewel-bedecked Sharyn Fireman, and one woman who said, "I'm here because I was in Palm Beach last week and saw a woman wearing a full-length sable in 85-degree heat."

Just Breathe

There was barely room for all the good karma at the House of Blues when it hosted a black-tie "awareness-raiser" to benefit Friends of Boston's Om-less.

The evening began with cocktails and chanting and continued with a vegan dinner and some deep-breathing exercises, accompanied by an acoustic set by Anoushka Shankar.

Present and accounted for: the toothsome twosome of Betty and Ali Riaz accompanied by the impish Sam Mendoza, the luscious Rebecca Pacheco, semi-deity David Magone, Beacon Hillions Liz and Peter Georgantas, stunning blonde Katherine O'Keefe and her other half, Ian, yummy mummy Jasmine Punzalan and her other half, Paul Mashikian, shopping-mall mistress Joan Jolley, investment guru Robert White, former Miss Texas Mary English, noted novelist Stephen McCauley and Cantabridgian intellect Rebecca Nemser.

The raffle prize was a Lululemon shopping spree, and the evening raised money to buy yoga mats for underprivileged children, which prompted one guest to grumble, "Pretty much every kid in India is underprivileged, and they invented yoga."

Ashley and Wes Karger at Birthright Mustique

John Milligan, CJ Menard and Rob Gravis at America's Next Top Porn Star

Meanwhile, in line for the bar, two guests got into a heated argument about who had the better yoga instructor, and it was only settled when one of them said, "Oh, yeah? Well, mine levitates."

Life's a Beach

Taking a page from Israel's playbook, Birthright Mustique held a beach-party–themed benefit at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston to raise money to send deserving 99 percenters for a week of R&R on the exclusive island in the Grenadines.

There to honor chair Julia Owens were banking boy-wonders Paul and Wes Karger with their stunning other halves, Pamela Vargas and Ashley, bio-tech mogul Mitch Sayare and the naturally carbonated Chrissy, Brahmin balabusta Julie Hume Gordon and the utterly irresistible Philip, the über-philanthropic Ashley and Paul Bernon, aristocratic literary agent Esmond Harmsworth, the delightfully bubbly Nina Schroeder and her other half, William, and one woman wearing a Chanel bikini so skimpy that another guest shouted, "Holy areolae!"

Tanning beds took the place of photo booths, and two tons of sand were hauled in for a beach volleyball match between the Hingham High-Lifers (cocaptained by Billy Meara and Ryan McCourt) and the Weston One Percenters (cocaptained by Jim Pallotta and Wyc Grousbeck).

The stakes: a case of Pabst Blue Ribbon… served aboard the loser's G-5.

Borrowing From Bravo

If reality-TV competition gets your blood pumping, you would've been positively tumescent at America's Next Top Porn Star, a fund-raiser for the AIDS Action Committee.

Held at Jacques Cabaret, the evening attracted the likes of Colombian Casanova Ricardo Rodriguez and his husband, Michael Kelley, Back Bay stud-muffins Tony Corey and CJ Menard, banking bigwig Wendell K. Chestnut and his hotty husband, Zane Bell, corn-fed cutie David Brown and his handsome other half, Benjamin Perkins, and Brazilian bad-boy Paulo Arrais, among others. Everything went swimmingly until the Boston Police shut the party down for "indecency," prompting one guest to say, "This wasn't nearly as tasteless as Fashion Star."

Oh, and by the way… April Fool's. ×××

Deep Eddy is the oldest spring-fed swimming hole in Texas. Austin locals have enjoyed its spring-fed waters for many years. In the spirit of Deep Eddy, we bring you yet another Texas landmark - the smoothest, most refreshing infused vodka around. Deep Eddy Ruby Red Vodka is handcrafted in Austin, TX in a small distillery using real Ruby Red Grapefruit juice. Great vodka is born from attention to the smallest details. Water, Filtration, and Distillation are where we shine. Coupled with a commitment to using the highest quality ingredients, you can really taste the difference. We use local, all-natural ingredients including Ruby Red Grapefruit from Texas, and because we charcoal-filter Deep Eddy, nothing but smooth clean vodka reaches the bottle. So raise a glass of Deep Eddy and you'll taste what we're so excited about.

The IMPROPER

What's the Matter

Last week, a $2 billion cosmic ray detector (available in both Calphalon and All-Clad stainless steel from Williams-Sonoma) turned up a big clue in scientists' hunt for dark matter. Dark matter is, of course, the mysterious substance that makes up 84.5% of existence but that, like a reasonably priced South End rental, has never been encountered by anyone. They say it binds the universe together like gluten. Unlike gluten, though, you can find dark matter in Gwyneth Paltrow's digestive tract.

Adam DeTour

If you were a sinister blob of dark matter, you might feel gratified to know that even though you were purely theoretical, the universe would vanish in a puff of particle physics if you called it quits and packed it in for Aruba. For existential clout, does anything come close? Vitamin B? Digital cable? Love?

How about a really well-constructed rum flip? Or rather, the magic sense of liberté and fraternité conjured by alcohol. (Ignore the counter-argument that booze just causes burping and social ills; this is the Bartenders issue.) Count how many bars you find in Boston. Now count the bookstores. It's no surprise that historians tell us agriculture may never have happened without our ancestors' thirst for beer, so it makes sense that our civilization would have evolved wondrous mechanisms to perfect the act of drinking. In a mere 8,000 years, we've gone from squatting in the mud of the Euphrates, sucking at the backwash in a communal clay pot, to leather banquettes, a half dozen grüner veitliners by the glass and house-infused bergamot vodka. Thank God for priorities.

Leg Up

BORN TO RUN

SHALANE FLANAGAN IS running the Boston Marathon for the first time. But 26.2 miles shouldn't be an issue for someone who runs an average of 110 miles per week. The Marblehead native, 31, who stretched her legs in the 2004, 2008 and 2012 Olympics, winning bronze for the women's 10,000-meter race in Beijing, is taking time away from the world stage to compete in something that jogs her memory.

"I love running along the [Charles] river. No matter what time of day or time of year, there are always runners out!" says Flanagan. She's currently training in Colorado Springs, with a workout routine of longer runs, interval sessions and exercises to build up her leg muscles to conquer the hilly route. Luckily, she's familiar with the course: Flanagan has plenty of experience watching the race and saw her father take part in the 100th-anniversary marathon. This time around, she's most excited to find a taste of home at the finish line. "I'm looking forward to celebrating with friends and family with some of my favorite Boston food and a Sam Adams beer!" says Flanagan.

Well Spread

Matt Murphy's has long served the best Irish food in town, but it wasn't until recently that the Brookline Village pub lightened up on its heavy sustenance. The best of the newer bar plates might be the headlining brandade—a crock of whipped potatoes and salt cod that's mostly velvety with soft, slightly smoky hunks of fish peeking through. The mixture spreads a little easier than pâté, and there's more than enough to cover the accompanying thick slices of grilled toast. For a fish 'n' chips effect, don't forget to shake a little malt vinegar on top.

SURF'S UP

WHEN KITCHEN SURFING.COM debuted in Boston last month, the appeal to potential customers was clear: just click to find an ad hoc personal chef who fits your budget and culinary preferences. As for the chefs, the back-end operations provided by the website help create a workplace free of "the ball and chain of traditional restaurants, which are capital sinks," says Lumière sous chef Chris Hallahan, who's also building a business as a private chef.

Scaling down is the future, he says, citing the example of food trucks. And the future may not belong to celebrity chefs, he adds. "I'm probably never going to be famous, but I don't care. It's like opening your own restaurant every time." It's also a little like speed dating; the chef can turn down the job if he or she isn't interested. But unlike speed dating: "You have to commit before you sample the product," quips spokesperson Mary Knudson.

RUMBA IN THE SUMMAH: Last year, RumBa at the InterContinental Boston opened RumBa on the Waterfront, an outdoor bar extension of RumBa. Come May, the rum-centric watering hole will unveil a further expansion, adding 42 seats (including a communal table), Fort Point Channel views and a revamped bar menu, including a selection of sliders such as lobster Cobb with saffron mayo and grilled lamb with merguez seasoning.

TEMPEH FUGIT: Veggie Galaxy in Central Square—cousin to Harvard Square's Veggie Planet—has a brand-new chef. Owner Adam Penn says Christian Simeone was "the right-hand man" to previous chef Brian Van Etten, so no major changes are in store beyond a "fresh perspective" at the vegetarian/vegan diner.

Pass the Blunt

Blunt Umbrellas
Leather World, 30 Langley Road, Newton
(617-332-6519) shopleatherworld.com

The April forecast is for frequent downpours and winds strong enough to blow Judy Garland all the way to Oz. In a given year, Boston's wind speeds are higher than alleged "Windy City" Chicago, and we get more rain than Seattle. Sure, April showers bring May flowers, but the seasonal rollercoaster takes a toll—especially on umbrellas.

Enter the Blunt, designed to weather whatever. The aerodynamic design eliminates sharp edges and other weak areas, and the taut canopy hews to the precept that tension equals strength. Models range in size, from the commuter-friendly XS Metro to the outsized Golf, and withstand up to 70-mile-per-hour winds, aided by specially designed floating ribs. Mary Poppins would be proud.

LIVING ARRANGEMENTS

When Andrea Halliday designs a floral arrangement for you, she asks a lot of questions—about what colors you like, sure, but also about where the flowers will go and about the room's window treatments. (For regular customers, she keeps drape fabric swatches on file.) Which is to say that her South End business, Table & Tulip, is several rungs above a bucket shop. It's rooted in customization, not to mention dazzling, eccentric blooms like fringed poppies, dainty jasmine buds and tulips as full as peonies. She's even got just the thing for the florician in your life: showpiece terrariums, which more or less take care of themselves.

OUT TO LUNCH

TO A POPULAR MEXICAN CAFE IN EAST BOSTON: My family planned to have Easter lunch there, so I called on Friday to ask if you would be serving a lunch on Sunday and was told that, yes, you'd be open until 3 pm. Given that this was the highlight of our day, I asked my husband to call again Sunday morning to be certain that the restaurant was serving lunch until 3 pm. This was confirmed again. After traveling for an hour and a half from the South Shore, we arrived before 2 pm and, to our great disappointment and dismay, we encountered a darkened restaurant with a "Closed" sign on the door. It's a shame that this place could leave such a bad taste in our mouths without the long-anticipated opportunity to taste the menu. I sincerely hope that you didn't have to close early due to a family emergency and that you were able to share an enjoyable Easter meal with your family.

Robin Gilbert

To the drivers in the EZ pass lane without an EZ pass: Is traffic not bad enough without you buffoons? I don't usually get into a vehicle in Boston before 8 pm, but on Monday morning I ventured off of Route 1 back to the city and found myself in car-pocalypse. And then you got yourself wedged into the EZ pass lane because you weren't paying attention. What did you think was happening? We were all throwing the toll fare out the window at the speed of light?

Cranky commuter

To the window cleaner on Cambridge Street: Maybe it appeared that I hadn't washed my hair in a while, but I certainly didn't need you to drop soap on my head while I was walking to work. I smelled like a mix of Windex and something else that shouldn't be on my scalp all day, which was not great.

Losing patches of hair

To the older tourist in Faneuil Hall: I generally don't mind taking pictures for out-of-towners, but when you had me take your photo on your iPad and then said "now this direction" about three times, we began to make a scene. I saw people watching. Next time, at least tip me for my time and talent.

KHAN DO SPIRIT

Mary had a little lamb—and then she ate it. At least, that's the idea at Beacon Hill's new Mongolian hot pot–style restaurant. Although it's a chain with nearly 600 locations in China, Japan, Australia and the United Kingdom, Little Lamb has yet to tap into the American market. Until now. Turns out, they're probably the only ones who came to Boston for the weather. "There are a couple of reasons we like Boston's environment," says Wincy Chin, general manager. "It's educated, and it's a historic city. Also the weather was a factor for our decision. We are a hot pot restaurant—people like that in the wintertime, and here there's a long winter. It will keep you warm."

Located on Cambridge St. in the Spotted Apron's old space, the 64-seat eatery has floor-to-ceiling windows, and guests are greeted just inside the door by a miniature grass pasture, complete with grazing figurines—a nod to the vast grasslands of Mongolia. Lamb, says Chin, is a staple in Mongolian cuisine. "People think that if you eat the lamb," she says, "it's the best taste, nutrition, everything."

Built into the center of each table is an electric warmer which keeps the broth bubbling hot. Though the menu is varied and somewhat mysterious—tomato broth with luncheon slices, anyone?—it includes Mongolian BBQ and Chinese favorites, such as steamed stuffed buns and scallion pancakes. There are nearly two dozen à la carte vegetables to choose from, a self-serve sauce station and a mix of noodles, both prepared and for the hot pot. Eight different broths poach your vegetables and thinly sliced meat of choice, be it lamb, short rib, chicken, tripe or head-on shrimp and other seafood. It's enough to satisfy an appetite of continental dimensions. Here's lookin' at you, Genghis.

Q&A

FORWARD BARTSCH

Nightlife icon Susanne Bartsch appears in "Bartschland in Boston" at the Revere Hotel on April 20.

What does being a nightlife icon mean to you?

It sounds good. I don't really go by what I'm called. If someone thinks I suck, that's their choice, and if someone thinks I'm an icon, then that's their choice, too. It is nice that people are viewing me as more than just a girl running around with a wig. I still feel that excitement and energy and sparkle within myself when I see people unite, flirting with each other, saying hello to each other. It's a great gift for me. It's just a beautiful energy, even if it lasts for just a couple of hours.

How have you maintained your stamina?

I don't do drugs, and I don't drink—very little—that's probably why I can keep doing this. Because otherwise it would have devoured me. That's the answer for physical health, spiritually. It's really that I love what I do. And I think when you love what you do it's kind of infectious. People gravitate. Do I have to pay the rent? Yes. But it's not for the rent that I'm doing it. I think being creative is a really important element in anybody's life, and in my life I refer to it as a spirituality. You have an idea, and to be able to make it happen and to make it come to life, it's really special.

Have parties changed since the '80s?

Yes, a lot. The economy tanked. I think around '86 things were much more flamboyant—people had more money. And then of course the whole change from dancing and great DJs: it became about bottle service, and that was really devastating to nightlife and events. It became so predictable. You buy a $500 bottle of vodka, and you have a table, and that's going to make you look good. But no. New York's become expensive, so the people I am inspired by—artists, writers, musicians—they can't afford to live here. It's definitely lost that flavor.

What's bringing you to Boston?

I am all about creating live art at my events—I see events as art. I think any hotel or commercial venture that supports the arts is what our world and culture needs right now. Boston is a beautiful place, and I think it will be a great backdrop to what I do. It's going to make it more eccentric. I'm very excited to come to Boston. I hope that people will be excited to come out and experience the night. Let's have a blast!

Drink of the Moment

MODERN CLASSIC

NAME: The Bostonian

PRICE: $12

INVENTORS: Abe & Louie's general manager Tim Fannin and director of beverage Mike Hanley

INGREDIENTS: Rittenhouse 100, Carpano Antica, Disaronno, Fee Bros. Orange Bitters, Luxardo Maraschino

CONCEPT: "We wanted a more approachable Manhattan," says Fannin. "Rye can be tough, so we landed on Rittenhouse 100." Despite its manly octane level, this is a sweet, quaffable rye with notes of chocolate and caramel. "We started with a 90 proof, but it just didn't stand up."

MORAL: Speak softly, but carry a big stick.

FLAVOR: The orange oils are strong on the nose, but the first taste of rye is mellowed with the complex, even bitter, Carpano Antica vermouth. Nuttiness from the amaretto further cushions the alcohol before you feel a backwards kick of citrus notes.

PERSONALITY: Mature, yet pleasing to both men and women in a broad age demographic. Kind of like Diane Sawyer in a glass.

STRAIGHT UP OR ROCKS? Either way. (Rocks.)

PAIR IT WITH: Something equally sophisticated yet broadly appealing, like the filet mignon, medium rare, au poivre on the side. A dish of grilled asparagus with evoo wouldn't hurt, either.

IN CONTEXT: "Our bar program is very classic oriented," says Fannin. "The Judy Garland [Stoli Vanil, Disaronno, pineapple, sparkling brut]. The espresso martini, which was a classic even before we put it on the menu. The menu was almost too classic." Hence the subtle refinements in the Bostonian.

BEER BETTER

There's a reason you can't taste your chicken noodle soup when you have a stuffy nose. Smell is responsible for 80 percent of what we taste—which is why scent is such a big concern for Sam Adams founder/brewer Jim Koch. "Aroma is so important to experiencing craft beer," he says. So when he finally decided to can his family's century-and-a-half-old recipe after almost three decades of exclusively using glass bottles, the design, taste and aromatics had to be just right.

With more than one million dollars and two years of research invested, the so-called Sam Can is slated for an early-summer debut. "I had my doubts about putting Sam Adams in a can because I wasn't convinced that Boston Lager would taste as good as it does from a bottle. [But with the Sam Can] we believe that this is a noticeably better drinking experience," Koch says.

The new can design "aims to provide a drinking experience that is closer to the taste and comfort of drinking beer from a glass," Koch explains. Thus, the Sam Can will have an opening located farther back to bring the drinker's nose closer to the hop aromas, a wider lid to open the mouth and allow more airflow, an hourglass ridge to create turbulence and push flavor out of the beer, and an extended lip to maximize the sweet, sweet taste of malt at the front of the palate.

Besides the fact all of this means you will soon be able to haul Boston Lager and Summer Ale to beaches, pools and anywhere else no bottle has gone before, cans have a whole slew of benefits: aluminum blocks out oxygen and sunlight better than glass, cools down faster and is more effective at maintaining carbonation.

Of course, Koch and his colleagues recognize that the Sam Can will undoubtedly face a degree of skepticism from traditional craft-beer drinkers. "On one side of the aisle, you have purists who think cans are meant to carry mass domestic beer," says Koch. "On the other side, the benefits."

EASY ON THE EYE

Crow's feet are flaws that we all—men included—want to cream. Instead of putting yourself under the knife, heed dermatologist Emmy Graber, who has a few tips for how to eliminate permanent morning eyes and crinkly wrinkles—including a legendary home remedy. "Using Preparation H works to tighten skin in other areas," says Graber, "so it can also help to reduce the appearance of baggy skin underneath eyes." In case that skeeves you out, here are other suggestions for looking at the world through fresh eyes.

WHIP IT GOOD

A novel inspired by the true story of a woman who lived as a man in the Old West

BORN IN BOSTON IN 1812, little Charlotte is befriended tenderly—even lyrically—by Lee in their cruel Dickensian orphanage. She's got a good heart that she turns towards Jonas, a black groom, when such sympathies were punished. He, in turn, mentors her, teaching her, in a therapeutic spirit, the ways of horse-riding: "Your mind was other places. When you're working with horses you got to be thinking only of them, breathing with them."

Charlotte shows a lot of boyish grit in her life. She eventually marries a runaway slave and gives birth to a baby. Horrifically, the jealous Lee murders father and child. In light of her abilities and proclivities, Charlotte then disguises herself as a man and refashions herself in the role of a strong, highly skilled stagecoach driver, whipping oxen and fighting outlaws.

The Whip
By Karen Kondazian

Kondazian is from Newton.

Now flip the book over and discover that what felt like fast-galloping fiction is, incredibly, based on the true story of Charlotte "Charley" Parkhurst, who, in 1868, in the guise of a man, was the first woman in America to cast a vote. The thrilling suspense of Charley's hidden gender includes a close friendship with housekeeper Anna and her daughter, both of whom adore her while never knowing her secret. There's energy in every chapter of this novel by author Karen Kondazian, who's better known as a stage and film actress. ✖✖✖

"An alarm rang through every part of Charley's body. Had she been an animal she might have put her head down at that moment and bolted, only the warm ripple of the air left as a sign of the creature who'd been there. Or she'd have charged forward at the man, screaming and baring her teeth; she'd have torn with her nails great handfuls of skin from him; and she'd have killed him with her bare hands."

A HOST OF GOLDEN DAFFODILS Cardiff Castle and shopping streets

WITH ITS HISTORY AS a bleak coal-mining town and a native language that resembles a word-scramble game, Cardiff, Wales, seems like a very distant cousin to cosmopolitan London. But even though Big Ben casts a lengthy shadow, Wales is a storied land of castles, Cybermen and Catherine Zeta-Jones. Cardiff is still relatively young—the city was only made the capital in 1955—but its Industrial Revolution appearance has aged gracefully enough that it looks like it could've been scooped out of a well-to-do London borough, minus the crowds and Tube toxins. Only a two-hour train ride from Paddington Station, Cardiff combines historical weight with its own modern impulses. And although all roads may eventually lead to the duty-free shops at Heathrow, it's nice to get to know the other side of the family.

The city's downtown area and retail district is easily manageable and divided into three major streets: Queen, St. Mary and the Hayes, which house many of the larger stores like Primark, Marks & Spencer and Topshop. Stay at the Radisson Blu hotel, which is just a few blocks away from the city center and the train station. Don't miss the Cardiff Market, which began as a place to trade livestock in the 18th century and is now a good place for traditional Welsh cake—a hybrid scone/pancake concoction with raisins and a granulated sugar topping.

For the essentially Welsh shops, head to the eclectic boutiques in any of the six Victorian- and Edwardian-style covered arcades. These double as ornate shelters from the rainy climate. Visit Morgan Arcade's Spillers Records, which has two floors of music merchandise, including a section of vinyl. Established in 1894, it's the oldest record store in the world. High Street Arcade's City Surf Skate and Snow sells surfboards that can conquer the cold swells of Southern Wales. Wetsuits are mandatory.

Where Queen and St. Mary streets meet you'll find a visual timeline of the city's history: Cardiff Castle. Resting on 2,000-year-old Roman walls, it's a Victorian estate created by coal-mining mogul John Crichton-Stuart, the 3rd Marquess of Bute. Perched on top of a mound in the center is a vine-ridden and beautifully crumbling Norman fortress, built in the late 1,000s. Adventurers can climb up to the top tiers for a William the Conqueror view of Cardiff.

The Marquess' over-the-top affinity for the medieval resulted in a gaudy Canterbury Tales-esque design scheme, so you half expect to find a turkey-leg vendor in the next room.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

After flying direct on British Airways, take the Heathrow Express from the airport to Paddington Station. The trains leave every quarter hour.

Rugby is more popular than football in Cardiff. Try to catch a Team Wales game at the 74,500-seat Millennium Stadium.

This is part of the fun. The two-story banquet hall includes a minstrels' gallery and a castle-shaped mantle (complete with turrets) that details the courtship of Lady Matilda. Wander into the Arab room to see a multi-level, mosque-inspired ceiling varnished with gold leaf that feels like it belongs in Aladdin's cave. The Roman-style rooftop courtyard is modeled after the ruins of Pompeii, replicated down to the mosaic tiles. And if you enjoy combing through the castle, Wales has more than 600 others to explore.

Just a 2,000-year-old stone's throw away from the castle is the Potted Pig, a haven for hog enthusiasts located in a converted, underground bank vault. The menu changes to include seasonal ingredients, but there's always something for every degree of pork fanatic, ranging from a whole suckling pig to a roast chicken topped with a light gravy-like bacon sauce and covered in bacon bits. Order a side of Welsh rarebit, a comfort food so beloved by this country that it even gets its own national holiday on September 3. The Potted Pig's version tastes like an open-faced, fondue-y grilled cheese sandwich, with a hint of mustard. Here, no one will judge you for eating like a pig.

While in Cardiff, make sure to schedule an appointment to see the Doctor. Situated in Cardiff Bay, right next to the BBC studios where the show is filmed, the Doctor Who Experience is part museum, part Disney sci-fi adventure. Visitors try to save the Doctor, television's most beloved Time Lord, by trying to fly the Tardis, a time-traveling machine disguised as a cobalt-blue police box. Naturally, you're captured by the Daleks en route. If you do manage to make it out alive, there's a two-story exhibition area where you'll find props used in the show, like the costumes of all 11 doctors, beginning with the first in 1963. There's even a collection of sonic screwdrivers, the Doctor's multifunctional weapon. The second floor offers a tribute to the series' villains and monsters, displaying full-size Cybermen, Oods, Daleks and Weeping Angels, the ferociously creepy garden statues that strike whenever their victims blink.

With its ancient roots, its singular history and its lively modern enticements, Cardiff is a very distinct destination in Great Britain. And make sure to grab a Welsh cake before you go back to Heathrow. They're not so easy to find abroad. ×××

BIRDS OF A FEATHER The duck board and the za'atar-spiced Giannone chicken are well worth a trip to the 'burbs.

IF YOU COULD EAT AT ONLY one restaurant for the rest of your life, chances are it'd have to be both reliably comforting and innovative enough to circumvent boredom. It'd be food that hinted at familiarity, but transported you somewhere more exotic, both geographically and imaginatively. The same criteria apply to your go-to restaurant: the neighborhood spot where you find yourself eating more than any other, the place you'd recommend without hesitation to visitors, friends and acquaintances alike. Sycamore, opened by chef/owner David Punch, formerly of Ten Tables Cambridge, is such a place. Its location in Newton is a boon to suburbanites who've, up until recently, had to drive to Cambridge and Boston for their fine-dining fix.

Comparable to Central Square's Rendezvous, Sycamore's bistro cuisine is inflected with a Mediterranean sensibility. In its best dishes, confident use of spices like chili, harissa, za'atar and ingredients like preserved Meyer lemons and chorizo elevate the menu from its more generic New American peers. If there's one signature dish that's not to be missed, however, it's the duck board ($60, for two). The presentation varies, and on my visit, the meaty Hudson Valley duck underwent four different treatments: cured and thinly sliced into meltingly tender pastrami, ground and formed into a juicy sausage, roasted with skin and thickly sliced, and confited until crisped and fatty like carnitas. Accompanying the generously portioned duck were pomegranate-sprinkled grains, earthy lentils with herbs and nuts, and slightly sweet coleslaw, all of which underscored Sycamore's exalted rustic fare. The other poultry offering, a za'atar-spiced Giannone chicken ($23), was also a standout. Dry-brined a day in advance, the flavorful chicken was crisp, perfectly seasoned and complemented by a colorful vegetable medley of kohlrabi, celery root, turnips and rapini.

The "daube de boeuf à la gasconne" ($26) was likewise well-executed. The hearty square of meat was saturated with a demi-glace that imparted savoriness to the sweet puréed parsnips. A Spanish seafood cassoulet ($24) pleased with its fish sausage, house-made chorizo (order anything on the menu that contains this) and littlenecks, but could've used more than a scant amount of navy beans to round out the mix. The pot pie ($21) had a lovely, flavorful pastry crust, but the mushrooms and root vegetables were suspended in a rather bland sauce. While the under-seasoned pot pie might've been an anomaly, the stale, cold bread served at every table was a consistent occurrence that never ceased to perplex, considering the quality of everything that followed. Vegetarians will have a tough time with the menu, as the pot pie is the only main option. Even the garlic soup ($11) has jamón, although carnivores might find it could use even more of the salty ham.

B.N.'s Picks

Duck board

Za'atar-spiced chicken

Daube de boeuf

Beignets

Desserts maintained the bar generally set by the previous courses. Especially noteworthy were the pillowy beignets ($8), perfectly fried from edge to edge, tossed with cardamom sugar and served with a candy-sweet milk jam. Craft cocktails ($9–$11) were consistent with the best programs in Boston and Cambridge. The Good Buddy ($10) lived up to its name with a citrusy blend of bourbon, Dolin Blanc and Campari that pairs well with the Mediterranean-inspired menu.

Newtonians might not need to venture toward the Charles River anymore for a delicious night out. But is Sycamore good enough that it warrants a commute to the 'burbs for spoilt Cantabrigians and Bostonians? Is anything worth taking the D Line during rush hour? For that duck board, absolutely. ×××

Q: WHAT IS THE BEST WAY FOR ME TO GET RID OF PIMPLES AND BREAKOUTS?

A: It is important to visit your skin care professional when you have breakouts. It is not a good idea to try to "pop" your pimples or use harsh facial scrubs, both of which can make the problem worse and could lead to scarring.

There are several good treatment choices to clear up your skin: Microdermabrasion, a light chemical peel, a good cleansing facial, or combinations thereof. One treatment will make a wonderful difference, but it may take several sessions to get your skin back to normal.

Professional treatments, combined with a good home care product regimen, can clear up your complexion, and hopefully, can keep you free of breakouts. Please come see us for a free consultations.

MISSED CONNECTION

For a film about the perils of technology, Disconnect gets its wires crossed.

Disconnect ★☆☆☆
Starring Jason Bateman, Alexander Skarsgård, Max Thieriot, Paula Patton, Michael Nyqvist, Andrea Riseborough and Frank Grillo. Written by Andrew Stern. Directed by Henry Alex Rubin. At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

WITH THE NOTABLE exception of Twilight movies, I usually try to behave myself at screenings. There's nothing worse than some boorish know-it-all infecting the audience experience with his opinions. But sometimes, dear readers, I just can't hold it together. I apologize to all unlucky enough to have been in attendance for Disconnect, director Henry Alex Rubin's hysterically overwrought, cautionary triptych about that newfangled thing the kids call The Internet. For about 95 of these 115 hand-wringing minutes I was able to stifle myself, but the ludicrousness eventually peaked at such inane heights that I finally doubled over, gasping for air with peals of laughter.

One of those deadly serious "everybody is connected" parables that were all the rage about 10 years ago, this magnificently misguided effort tells three interlocking stories of lives ruined by Wi-Fi. Pitched somewhere near the somber worst-case scenarios of a driver's education training film, it's Reefer Madness with smartphones. The title is more of a command: Unplug your modem or certain doom lies in wait.

Paula Patton and Alexander Skarsgård anchor the first tale, as a couple riddled with guilty secrets after the death of their newborn son. She now spends evenings confiding in a handsome stranger (The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo's Michael Nyqvist) in a chat room for grieving parents, while her hubby racks up debts and sends them into second mortgage territory via an offshore gambling site. Then, one day, their credit cards don't work anymore, and suddenly we're watching the second terrible Jason Bateman movie this year that revolves around identity theft.

Yes, Bateman again. Taking on an ill-advised dramatic role, he clearly means business here because he has a very serious beard. Bateman's cast as the brusque dad of a sad-sack teen outcast (Jonah Bobo) who's a victim of cyberbullying. Tragedy predictably ensues, and we've suddenly got Michael Bluth as an online detective, tracking down his son's Facebook friends and discovering a world of sadness and sleaze.

Speaking of sleaze, on the other side of town we've got an ambitious local news reporter (Andrea Riseborough) stumbling onto a webcam ring where exploited runaway teens pleasure themselves for perverts. Indulging in a spectacularly unethical relationship with the site's star rent boy (Max Thieriot), she gets all the fame and attention she craved, and then some.

Early on, it becomes impossible not to imagine screenwriter Andrew Stern as Grandpa Simpson, waving his cane and telling all you kids to get your damn Twitter off his lawn. Lord knows, online bullying and child exploitation are serious problems, and obviously our era of connectivity has left us vulnerable to cybercrimes. But the film's incessant alarmist tone is laughably unconvincing. For most sane, well-adjusted folks, using the Internet is just a fact of life, not a cause for garment-rending hysteria. Millions of people meet and communicate online every day; it's really not the end of the world, dude.

In 2005, director Henry Alex Rubin helmed (with Dana Adam Shapiro) the wonderful Murderball, a cheerfully rough-edged and inspirational documentary about the U.S. quad rugby team's trip to the Paralympics. It's hard to reconcile that film's easy charm with Disconnect's monotonous gloomy portent. Shot by cinematographer Ken Seng in a sickly Listerine-green digital pall, it's an incredibly unpleasant film to look at. Composer Max Richter strip-mines his own classical pieces for the score, self-cannibalizing "On the Nature of Daylight," which was already so memorably used in Shutter Island.

It's a tired requirement of this genre that the seemingly disparate stories eventually intersect, often through foolishly contrived means. The key here is a former cop played by the terrific character actor Frank Grillo, who was so wonderful in The Grey and provides the only relaxed, human performance in a sea of tousle-headed despair. Stern's screenplay orchestrates the misery into a triple climax that naturally occurs on an ominously rainy night, and the outlandishness is exacerbated by Rubin's decision to cross-cut it all together in super slow motion.

By the time a wrathful Bateman gutturally howls and leaps through the air waving a hockey stick as an instrument of vengeance, his movements slowed to the crawl of Richter's monotonous strings, I just couldn't take it anymore. I laughed so hard I was crying.

Of course, as soon as the movie was over, I immediately jumped online to tell everybody about it. I must be part of the problem. ✖✖✖

GAMAK ATTACK

Rudresh Mahanthappa
plays Scullers Jazz Club on April 24.

HIS SURNAME MAY NOT be easy to pronounce, but Rudresh Mahanthappa has certainly made a name for himself in jazz circles and beyond. "Until about 10 years ago, I have the feeling I was often referred to as 'that Indian alto player,'" says the saxophonist/composer, "and I think people have dropped the 'Indian.'"

Ironically, that's when Mahanthappa—voted top alto saxophonist in DownBeat magazine's critics' poll the past two years running—truly drew on his musical heritage. He avoided recording with Indian instrumentalists until his 2008 album, Kinsmen. And he still favors cross-cultural explorations that reflect his immersion in prog-rock, be-bop and math-metal as well as classical music both Indian and Western.

"One of the goals for my music has been to express my hybrid identity," Mahanthappa, 41, says. "The idea of doing something cross-cultural is that you're not fusing two things together. You're actually integrating two things to make something that's new, and that's not such an easy task."

He surely doesn't take the easy route as a composer or player. That's immediately clear from the river-rapids alto flow and shifting time signatures of "Waiting Is Forbidden," the lead track from Gamak, his dazzling January release with electric guitarist David "Fuze" Fiuczynski, acoustic bassist Francois Moutin and drummer Dan Weiss, who has also played tabla with Mahanthappa. Gene Lake, another associate, will sub for Weiss when the group plays Scullers Jazz Club on April 24.

> "Any instrumentalist that's striving to communicate is essentially trying to vocalize."

"We're all coming from similar mindsets in terms of how we deal with rhythm and melody, but it's tough—that opening track is definitely a bear," the 1992 Berklee graduate says of his quartet's navigation of highly notated melodies and pinpoint rhythmic structures that echo Indian classical music. "All this music was written for these guys specifically. I wrote around what I knew they can do and even with a little forethought in terms of what it'll become after we've been playing a while."

Boston-based foil Fiuczynski accents the Mahavishnu-style virtuosity with his punk bravado, microtonal grounding and sonic diversity, including sitar-like slide work on the fretless half of his double-neck for the raga "Abhogi." Closer "Majesty of the Blues" straightens out the rock angle, capping Gamak with thrash-swing.

"I see some of the stuff on that album as being more akin to Yes or King Crimson than a jazz record," says Mahanthappa, citing prog-rock influences that balance his love for edgy jazz pioneers John Coltrane and alto model Charlie "Bird" Parker.

Raised by immigrant parents in Boulder, Colo., he says, "It was easier to think of myself as white than actually trying to figure out what Indian or Indian-American meant. We grew up with a lot of Indian elements: We practiced Hinduism, we ate South Indian food 98 percent of the time. But as far as music goes... it gets complicated."

Weaned on R&B saxman Grover Washington Jr. and rock royalty Queen and Prince instead of Indian classical music, he only dug into his heritage after post-college travels in his parents' homeland. "I had to find a way to actually check the music out on my own terms that wasn't laden with pressure or the sense I was trying to prove something to somebody," he says. "It took a while to get there."

He's since found his voice for a broader audience, with robust energy and a tart tone that can even evoke the Shehnai, an Indian double-reed instrument. "Gamak" comes from the word for ornamentation in Indian classical music, and Mahanthappa suggests a parallel with the vocal riffs of Western singers.

"It is the ornamentation that makes it human," he says. "That's what gives it that real vocal quality. Any instrumentalist that's striving to communicate is essentially trying to vocalize." ×××

On a Roman holiday

BACK IN THE STONE AGE before computers, when real live telephone operators had to get you outside calls, I visited Rome for the first time. I made the grand tour on less than 10 bucks a day. One of my friends played the guitar, and the three of us had acted in college musicals. We would go to a cafe, sing some songs and inevitably attract a small crowd. Often we were treated to free food and cheap vino. One of my early lessons in life was in learning to scrounge, to swap something of some value to someone in return for goods and services. Military people would call it a form of foraging. It taught me how to be resourceful on very little money. This helped a lot when, in our first days in Rome, venturing to rent Vespas, I panicked at the prospect of operating anything mechanical and hit three parked cars in 20 seconds, ending up lying on the pavement with my friends laughing hysterically. We talked ourselves out of that scrape.

Last month I returned to Rome, mainly to visit two friends who, for some years, have rented a winter apartment on the Via del Gesù. They take language classes, read novels and newspapers in Italian, cook spectacular meals, immerse themselves in Roman history and try to re-create the lives of expatriates from the past, observing modern Europe while assessing America from afar.

I told them about my initial, long-ago visit, when it was popular in Europe to refer to us collectively as "the ugly American." Nothing has changed in that regard, and I thought it would be fascinating to visit Italy in a time when unemployment among the young is as high as 30 percent. And it's also a time when many Americans view our own country as in its imperial decline and fall.

I sat next to a man at a Sunday morning concert at the American Academy, which sits on top of the Janiculum. At intermission I asked him about the Italian economy and the future of the country. He smiled and shrugged. "It's a mess," he said, "but it's been a mess for thousands of years. And we're still here."

I think that every young person coming out of school should see Rome, and for many reasons, not just to read about great empires in history books or classes. You need to see certain things firsthand, with your own eyes, not the impressions on the Internet, or images selected by others.

Rome is thousands of years old. You can visit the Basilica di San Clemente and see three levels spanning different eras, from the 12th century all the way back to the first century AD.

I was overwhelmed during my Roman holiday by how little human nature has changed in all this time. For instance, there have been drunkards since the beginning of wine. The most whimsical fountain is on a short street, the Via Lata. It's the Fontana del Facchino. Set into a wall, it's a carving of a neighborhood drunk, fat and jolly, holding a small cask from which liquid spouts. My friend David said, "This fountain is the height of irony. The drunkard is doomed through all of eternity to have a cask spouting not wine... but water."

Avoiding taxes has been, virtually forever, a national sport in Italy. And Rome has always prided itself on being independent in this regard, proud and inventive in selfishness. For instance, Tod's, the Italian fashion company, stepped up and offered to put up $25 million to refurbish the Colosseum. There are always men dressed as gladiators and Roman legionnaires outside of the Colosseum, hustling tourists for photo ops. They're freelancers, nothing official, and they would've been banned from hustling once the renovation had been completed. Naturally, the gladiators sued, and the money was held up for months while the bureaucracy fiddled. Every Roman for his own vision of the world, and damn the public at large.

If you have hot blood flowing in your veins, you should seek out Caravaggio—my newest, I'll admit, favorite painter. Google him and visit every church or collection in Rome and view the maestro, remembering that genius almost never comes with sterling character. Caravaggio was a tavern brawler and dark personality like almost no one in the Renaissance. Forced by the times to do religious painting, he had a wicked eye, complicated, ironic. And he really was wicked. Go see him and tell me if human nature has changed since 1605.

Little bites not to be missed: Romans sit dinner from 8:30 'til 10 or so, not as late as in Madrid, not as early as in Boca Raton. For upscale Roman dining, I loved Dal Bolognese, right off the Piazza del Popolo. Less well-known, the little Salumeria Roscioli serves spaghetti carbonara that's almost an aphrodisiac. Many Romans eat gelato around five o'clock; my favorite place for this was a bar/café called Ciampini in the Piazza San Lorenzo. Coffee is a big part of everyone's day, and I liked to keep it simple with a tongue-pleasing macchiato. And Romans make a ritual of stirring, sometimes for minutes at a time. You touch wood for luck; you spend time appreciating the sensual pleasures of sound, sight and "the stir."

I was in a taxi when news of Pope Francis' election came on the car radio. The driver stopped dead in traffic and leaped out of the car, yelling and jumping in delight. Then he ran around the taxi, screaming into a cell phone. When he jumped back in, I said, "Really happy about the new pope?"

He said, "No, I won €100 on the election from my brother-in-law."

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A guide to Boston supermarkets

WITH WEGMAN'S supermarket chain coming to town, people who enjoy shopping for food could not be happier. If you've never heard of Wegman's, it's like Stop & Shop but entirely different. It was founded by shadowy genius Willy Wegman, who periodically issues golden coupons for tours of his spledifical groceriams, as they're called. It's said that in Wegman's, the green bananas ripen on your way to the register, and people who abuse the 12-items-or-less line are dropped through a trap door and eaten by wolves. I know it sounds wonderful, but Wegman's won't be here for a while, so in the meantime I offer a modest guide to help you choose whatever inferior grocer will sustain you until the magical day when Willy Wegman cuts the ribbon and rides his giraffe into the new store, per tradition.

Picking a supermarket is like picking a sports team—loyalty is cultivated and transgressors punished. A cashier will always know you're an imposter if you venture off your home turf, because when they ask for your keychain discount thingie you'll say you left it at home, and everyone will know you're fibbing and just trying to get them to use the one they keep at the register so you won't have to pay $12.99 for a Snickers bar. Plus, it will take you three hours to find that Snickers bar in the first place, because the layout of the store will be just different enough to make you question your sanity. So choosing your regular grocery store is a decision of utmost importance.

Let's start at the top, with Whole Foods and Fresh Market. I know the latter is in Hingham, but maybe you feel like grabbing a Wahlburger or seeing lots of 58-year-old women who look like they're 41. Whole Foods offers a crunchy earth-loving vibe, while its rapacious CEO would cure global warming by shooting poor people into space—that is, if global warming existed, which it doesn't, you bunch of filthy sandal-wearing Whole Foods shoppers. The Whole Foods store brand is called Delicious Irony.

Fresh Market's aisles are meant to replicate the crowded alleys of a Moroccan bazaar. In one corner, a swarthy man sifts exotic spices, while in the next a wizened old crone milks a goat. At the register, you haggle and possibly end up buying an ornate rug. The store brand is called My Friend, My Friend, Please Take a Look.

Moving toward the city, we have the Shaw's at the JFK T stop. The salient point about this establishment is that there's a liquor store under the same roof. Is it a liquor store where you can get groceries, or a grocery store where you can get liquor? Either way, if your shopping list consists of bananas and a quart of Wild Turkey, you've come to the right place. Each Shaw's house brand describes the given foodstuff, such as the popular Wheat Rings of 1.5-Centimeter Diameter, Intended for Breakfast Consumption.

Stop & Shop is similar to Shaw's, with the notable exception that it offers the Peapod delivery service. Peapod is Stop & Shop delivered to your door, which is disconcerting when the truck driver dons plastic gloves and proffers a slice of ham to ask if it's the correct thickness. It is, and yes, you'd like a sample. Fun fact: When you ask where to find the spaghetti sauce at the Southie Stop & Shop, you'll probably be directed to the ethnic foods. The Stop & Shop store brand is called Close-E-Nuff.

If your title is "professor" or "head psychic," then Trader Joe's might be for you. Trader Joe's is sort of a cross between Whole Foods and a UN refugee camp. I have a friend who hits the Cambridge store specifically to buy wine, and he reports that the only drawback is when the cashier says, "Stocking up for the summer, huh?" when really he's just planning for the next two weeks. Cashiers should mind their own business. I mean, if I'm buying a jug of wine, a bag of clothespins and a box of condoms, don't say, "Hey, can I come to the party?" unless you really mean it. The Trader Joe's house brand is Captain Shacklebottom's Far East Provision Corps.

I know I'm missing several more establishments, like Roxie's and Star and Bee's Knees Supply Company, where they will mix bespoke mustache wax while you wait for a really cool chicken to lay some eggs, or not, whatever. The point is, the impeding arrival of Wegman's means that it's time to really ponder who you are, dig deep into your dreams and aspirations, your self-image and plans for your children's children, and choose a grocery store that's in sync with everything you are and everything you hope to become.

Or you could just go to the one that's closest to where you live. ✖✖✖

"You need to do miserable things

Soroff On CHRISTOPHER KNIGHT

"Peter" from The Brady Bunch talks about child stardom, Danny Bonaduce's blood and pork chops.

ACTOR, ENTREPRENEUR, REALITY-TV STAR AND GAME-SHOW HOST Christopher Knight, 55, will forever be known as Peter Brady, the middle brother he played on The Brady Bunch. After the show ended in 1974, he became a successful high-tech businessman. In 2003, he was on VH1's The Surreal Life, where his romance with co-star and America's Next Top Model winner Adrianne Curry spawned the show My Fair Brady, which aired from 2005 to 2008 (the couple later split). He was the host of Trivial Pursuit: America Plays and co-host of a talk radio show in California, where he lives. He's the celebrity spokesperson for Journey Forward, a Canton-based charity aimed at bettering the lives of people with spinal-chord injuries.

Jonathan Soroff: You'll always be Peter Brady. Does that bug you?
Christopher Knight: It stopped bugging me a while ago, when I realized that the only way to overcome that problem would be to kill myself. It's a negative in trying to get work as an actor, for sure. But it helped to pay the bills, and there's a lot of love out there for Peter Brady. So it's a mixed bag.

How often in business did people say, "Oh my God! I'm doing business with Peter Brady!"
It happened a lot at first. There was some magazine that was supposed to write a piece on a product I was working on, and they wound up writing pretty much exclusively about Peter Brady. You just start feeling like an un-zoo'd animal that people stare at.

How often do you hear, "Marcia, Marcia, Marcia!"
I do, but only after people ask me to say, "Pork chops and applesauce." I'm probably the only human plagued by pork chops and applesauce. I embrace it. I named my production company Pork Chop Phenomenon, Inc.

So what about doing a reality show seemed like a good idea to you?
I never thought it was a great idea, but I did it. And it is one of the most difficult, miserable things one could subject oneself to, but I come from that strain of Catholics that recognizes you need to do miserable things to feel alive.

Do you get royalties from The Brady Bunch?
No, we don't. We got fed by the union.

Susan Olsen. Did she irritate you as much as she irritated me as a kid?
Not at all. She's irritating now, but she was great back then. [Laughs.]

Did you know you'd be a pop-cultural icon?
No, not at all. There wasn't paparazzi, or this obsessive attention to the details of a celebrity's life. Time magazine was intrigued by the Kennedys or heads of state, maybe royalty. There were stars who got a lot of attention, like Elizabeth Taylor, but for people like me, there was Teen Beat and Sixteen magazine.

Weirdest fan encounter?
Not so much a single encounter. My greatest fear was being in a mall and seeing three girls without an adult. Even with an adult, it didn't matter. As soon as I saw them, it was like, "Leave!" They didn't mean any harm, I'm sure, but it was humiliating.

Sherwood Schwartz—was he a prick?
It's become really easy to paint this picture of a guy who was a Svengali-like overlord. He was no Andrew Carnegie. He made two low-budget TV shows [The Brady Bunch and Gilligan's Island] that were surprisingly successful. He happened to have two hits.

Your favorite episode?
The ones where we got to go out on location and play on real grass instead of the plastic grass we had on the set and breathe fresh air. That, and the episodes directed by Bob [Robert Reed, who played Mike Brady], because he would actually let us be free to act. He'd say, "How do you want to do this? How do you see this working?"

Did Barry Williams ever punch you?
Barry was a dick, and he was the first person to hear me say that. I'm not even being snarky. He was just an absolute dick as a kid. He graduated early from high school, got emancipated, and he never wanted to hang out with anybody his own age. There's that story about him taking Florence out. There's no doubt in my mind that he thought they were going on a date. Of course, over time, he became like a big brother, and we're still extremely close.

So is Danny Bonaduce hittin' the steroids a little too hard?
I don't think there's a drug he doesn't take, but most of them are prescription. I think he needs to counteract the natural drugs that are flowing through his blood. I think Charlie Sheen was drinking Danny Bonaduce's blood when he was talking about Tiger's Blood.

Most embarrassing thing you ever did on the show?
Singing, by far. It was traumatic. That whole episode where my voice changing was them just pointing out that I couldn't sing. My first experience with depression was that week.

What was up with creepy cousin Oliver?
I don't know why everybody thought he was such a creep. Barry hated Oliver, because he was eating into his screen time, but I just thought it made business sense. We were all aging out. It was a kids' show.

Did it ever occur to anyone in the Hawaii episode that tarantulas don't live in Hawaii?
Yes. It was well discussed, but if Sherwood was making the show he was making, we weren't living in Southern California, either. It was an alternate universe, and in that universe, Hawaii had spiders.

One thing people would be shocked to learn about you?
That I don't like people very much.

Would you ever let your kid be an actor?
No! For cryin' out loud, my response is: Parents are the ones who should work. Not their kids. There is no success they can have as a child that will be of any consequence to any success they can have as an adult, and in fact, it could become an impediment. But either way, it warps them. End of story. ×××

THE GREAT
IMPROPER BARTENDING COMPETITION
2013

BY ANDREW RIMAS

These are interesting times for inebriates.

Kitchen and bar ingredients blur the lines between plate and highball glass. Local spirits punch above their weight. Beers go alchemical, and mixologists scour the slopes of Mount Etna for rare amari. A year ago, the Great Improper Bartending Competition left a wake of dirty glasses and broken dreams, with Backbar's Sam Treadway hoisting the victor's cup on the merits of a blend of Japanese whisky, ginger liqueur and Sriracha—the sort of drink order that might once have gotten you slapped at a TGI Friday's, but that's now barely more exotic than a tea-infused ice cube.

Now we welcome you to...

THE GREAT IMPROPER BARTENDING COMPETITION, 2013

BY Andrew Rimas

This year, our competition took a regional bent. We invited two teams of master bartenders from opposite sides of the river to battle for glory.

The Bartenders

THE BOSTONIANS

Katie Emmerson of the Hawthorne.....
she may look innocent, but her sylph-like figure belies a liver of steel

Sean Frederick of Citizen Public House..... a gentleman of rapid-fire wit, and a quick draw with the bitters

Ted Kilpatrick of No. 9 Park.....
his hirsute affability masks crushing cocktail expertise

THE CANTABRIGIANS (PLUS ONE SOMERVILLEN)

Emma Hollander of Trina's Starlite Lounge.....
a lady of cropped hair, bold tattoo and subtle tastebuds

Noon Inthasuwan of Moksa.....
she's smiling because she put something revolutionary in your drink

Jason Kilgore of Catalyst.....
a maestro infuser, bow-tie wearer and prince of heavy metal

ACT ONE

SCENE:
Winter. The upstairs function room at Abby Lane, a glamorous Theater District restaurant helmed by chef Jason Santos. The décor is from fêted designer (and erstwhile Improper cover model) Taniya Nayak. It's got a long bar suitable for violent muddling and enough tufted settees to comfortably nest a flock of peacocks. Also, really excellent flatbreads.

Andrew: Alas, the second blizzard in a fortnight is in full discharge, and my spirits droop under the weight of low barometric pressure. Fie on thee, foul, hyperborean winds! My kingdom for a hot toddy.

Enter judges, peeling snow off their coats in wads and warming themselves by the fire. They shake hands, back-slap the bartenders and quip about cirrhosis.

Andrew: Lest the cataracts and hurricanoes spout 'til they have drench'd our steeples and drown'd the cocks, we ought to get started. We've got two teams, elimination brackets with one bartender getting cut per team, per round. It's Cambridge versus Boston.

Sean: I thought they only drank ironic beers in Cambridge.

Ted: I think you mean "organic."

Andrew: The first challenge is to concoct a drink employing one of your native foodstuffs. For Bostonians, in honor of your longstanding historical connection, you've got to use molasses. Cambridge has a history of candy manufacturing, so you get Necco Wafers (either regular or chocolate). You have 10 minutes.

There is much muddling. Noon stirs a wafer into a clear liquid. Someone plays with fire. Five minutes in, Emma hands each of the judges a Miller High Life pony, instantly vaulting her into the lead.

Andrew: Time's up. We begin with Boston.

Ted: This is a variant on the Lion's Tail, a rum cordial with equal parts Angostura bitters and molasses. It's Ron Abuelo, simple syrup, lemon and an egg white. [To Jarek] By the way, I may have flooded your sink.

The judges smile wolfishly. It's a nicely balanced drink, with the sweetness cut by the lemon and bitters, but there's little taste of molasses. They step up to Katie.

Katie: I mixed Myers's Rum with lemon juice, Campari and simple syrup. There's a bar spoon of molasses and Bitter Truth Old Time Aromatic Bitters. It's shaken with orange wedges, and topped with orange oil.

More nods and smiles; tongues dart in appreciation at the orange aroma. Again, the flavors are as precisely calibrated as a Breitling.

Sean: This is a take on the Yankee Flip. Back in the day, molasses was the only real sweetener. Playing with that, I used the darkest rum available, added maple liqueur, a whole egg (dry shaken) and topped it with Irish stout.

Drinking deeper now, the judges jot scores. Despite the layered, sweet ingredients, this is a quintessentially bitter tipple in its soul. Delicious.

Noon: Mine is sugar and spice and all things nice. New England is apples, so I used apple liqueur with rum and infused simple syrup with the Necco wafers. Then I added a rim of balsamic vinegar, salt, sugar and cayenne.

The judges murmur in appreciation at the vision, the complexity, the unexpected play of sweet and sour. Smiles all around.

Emma: I started you with a palate cleanser of Miller High Life. This is St. Germain, tequila, dram. I'm so fing sick of snow, so the first thing that popped into my head was Airborne! So I thought if I added prosecco, the Necco wafer would bubble up like Airborne.

It did not. The candy disc floats sadly in the glass of citrusy liquid, pointedly failing to fizz. But the cocktail itself tastes pleasantly sour.

Jason: I remember why I hated Necco wafers as a kid... the chalky flavor. I muddled the wafers to bring out the chocolate, then added bitters that had a strong tannin presence to mimic the chalkiness. I atomized and ignited green Chartreuse, for a toasted-marshmallow taste.

A Rémy Martin base is enlivened by coffee, hazelnut and overt cinnamon and allspice. The judges retreat to the fireplace.

Cleve: I really liked Sean's.

Kitty: He was my lowest score. I'm really sensitive to bitter.

Jarek: I thought Katie's was a little too bitter.

Cleve: From the Cambridge team, I liked Noon's the best.

Jarek: Yes, I like a spicy cocktail...

Kitty: I've got Noon and Emma tied, but I thought Jason's was integrated really well.

Cleve: His use of the dram was really persistent. I thought Emma's worked with the beer, but she should have used that instead of prosecco.

The judges' brows furrow perilously deep as they attempt math.

Andrew: After tallying the scores, we sadly bid adieu to Katie from the Boston team and Emma from the Cambridge team. May flights of angels sing thee to thy rest.

Exeunt Emma and Katie.

Andrew: Golden lads and girls all must, as cocktail-makers come to dust. The next elimination round is part Rorschach test, part Yankee swap. In reverse order of your score from the last round, you'll each pick a paper from Brother Cleve's hat. On it is a word or phrase around which you have to create a drink. The catch: Anyone who picks their paper subsequent to you is free to exchange words. Based on your scores from low to high, then, we'll go Jason, Ted, Sean and Noon.

Jason: "Unicorn."

Ted: "Pope."

PERONI

Sean: "Crystal meth." Okay, I'm gonna go ahead and swap that for "pope."

Noon: "George Washington." [Swaps it, too, for Sean's "pope."]

Andrew: You have 10 minutes.

The clock begins, and Sean energetically whacks something inside a canvas sack. Everyone jiggers, stirs, harasses the peels off oranges. The judges placidly chew flatbreads.

Andrew: Time's up. Starting with Jason's unicorn...

Jason: It's served in a champagne flute, representing the horn. I wanted absinthe for that fairytale quality, but I had to substitute Sambuca, which tastes similar. I also used house-made aromatic and garden bitters. And St. Germain, for femininity.

Cleve and Kitty rub the garden bitters on their wrists for sniffing. The judges are grinning broadly now and take multiple swigs, just to double-check their notes. Their handwriting, however, is deteriorating. Even so, they manage to jot down words like "muddled cucumbers" and "eminently drinkable."

Noon: For the pope, I wanted everything Italian. Campari, Meletti, Sambuca. But it was lacking acidity, so I added balsamic. Vinegar has a longer shelf life than citrus.

Cleve: This is my cross to bear!

Laughter. The amaro flavors are strong to overwhelming, but this earns extra points from the judges who are herbally inclined. Everyone's becoming very friendly.

Sean: Allow me to present the George Washington, or the 1789 Swizzle. I used Mount Gay Rum from Barbados, since George Washington served Barbados rum at his inauguration. I added some Sailor Jerry rum, too. Pineapples were a popular ornamental device in the 1700s, and, in reference to the cherry tree, I've got some Creole bitters with cherry bark notes.

Sweet, but not overpowering, there's much murmuring about tiki drinks from heaven.

Ted: Crystal meth! As an enthusiast, I really wanted to take you back to that first time. The glass is rinsed with Sambuca to give you that crisp, cooling mentho-lyptus nose. And any anise-based liqueur will take on a foggy hue, which I find appropriate. Then it's Bully Boy White Whiskey, Kung Fu Girl Riesling and a dash of orange bitters.

Cleve: In the '70s, we'd put a little crystal on the tongue and then take a taste of Sambuca. We called it the Great Zambooky.

Ted: Ah, the royal "we."

Kitty: This is a great mocktail!

The judges again retire to the fireplace.

Cleve: I try to take my personal preferences out of it, but that's impossible 'cause I like to drink what I like to drink.

Everyone agrees, noting the impossibility of objective judgment in light of the infinite permutations of the human nous. Plus, sometimes all you really want is a fruity umbrella drink. Sean takes it by a whisker for Boston, while the Cambridge contestants are tied. It's down to a revote, which Jason wins.

Exeunt Noon and Ted.

Andrew: You few, you happy few, you brave mixologists. For your final challenge, please create a drink called the Improper Bostonian. Lay on, and damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough on the tequila."

The finalists take their time, visibly thinking through the conceptual layers of mixing a slightly off-kilter cocktail. Several minutes pass before they begin splashing whisky around. Then the clock strikes.

Sean: This is a drink about bad ideas. I call it the Wedding Crasher. In a nod to Boston's Irish heritage, there's a base of Bushmills. Then sweet vermouth and Fernet Branca, which isn't always the right decision at 2:30 am.

Kitty: I thought you said this was about bad ideas!

Sean: The glass is rinsed with Jägermeister and Laphroaig 10, in the spirit of grabbing any glass lying around at the end of the night. I wanted aggressive, nasty flavors on the nose.

Kitty: You could walk down the stairs and still smell this…

Ted: It's like you rinsed it in a cocktail!

Even the judges seem a little discombobulated by the contrasts, which prompt the words "satanic mouthwash."

Jason: I made a flip honoring the fact that Boston was the first place to be turned on by Fernet. We've got Fernet, Jameson, Bully Boy White, a whole egg, syrup and house-recipe bitters.

It tastes creamy, pillowing the whisky bite in foam. The judges retreat for a final time.

Jarek: I could drink the flip all night, and I like the use of local products.

Cleve: It's a little more universal.

Kitty: Yes, it's more palatable.

Andrew: With great pleasure, then, allow me to announce that Jason Kilgore of Catalyst wins the final challenge for Cambridge!

There is much rejoicing. The bartenders pack their spoons and strainers while onlookers steal sips from unattended cocktails. Kitty makes plans to carry on the evening at Eastern Standard. Cleve doffs his hat. Jarek slips downstairs to feed the meter.

Andrew: Thank you all for coming. You're all winners, really, especially us judges. That was awesome. But the time approaches that will with due decision make us know what we shall say we have, and what we owe. Um. We're not getting charged for this, right?

Exeunt slowly, holding the bannister.

MAN CANNOT MAKE LAST CALL ON BEER ALONE.

If a bar crawl is ambitious, it requires fuel of the solid sort. But a rowdy evening out with your friends is like an eight-course meal; a subtle morsel at 5 pm will, by 10:30, taste like steamed oxygen. In the spirit of practicality (and palate degeneration), we've curated a list of Boston's finest bar foods and paired beverages, presented in chronological order for an Improper night on the town.

Apple Street Farm Egg with Caviar & LILLET

5:32 pm: Begin your night with a moment of calculated refinement in the salon at L'Espalier, the culinary crown jewel of the Back Bay. Like a woman's smile, an amuse-bouche is meant to delight and then vanish in the flash of a synapse, leaving a pleasurable memory. There are few bites more pleasing than L'Espalier's egg with caviar. A modern twist on French-style scrambled eggs, it's butter and milk with slow-cooked egg from chef Frank McClelland's farm, frothed into weightlessness and grounded in Siberian sturgeon caviar. The luxurious foam pops with the salty roe. Cut with a clean sip of Lillet or Champagne, it's the essence of opulence served in a porcelain dish.

Smoked Sable Tacos & BARREL-AGED WHISKEY

Ploughman Board & DINNER WITH MACGOWAN

Grilled Octopus with Green Chickpeas, Salty Pig Chorizo and Fennel "in Pinzimonio" & SANTA CHRISTINA ORVIETO CLASSICO, VILLA ANTINORI

8:11 pm: By now your palate is braced for any experience, but the surprise of the Salty Pig's octopus is in the texture. As tender and delicate as veal, a richly seasoned tentacle is speckled with crunchy green chickpeas for freshness and house-made chorizo for an unctuous kick. The contrasting textures and flavors of farm, sea and garden harmonize with a sip of Umbrian Santa Christina Orvieto Classico. Though the dish is pure Spain, the wine is from Etruria, where chef Kevin O'Donnell mastered his Mediterranean flavors. "It's a very ancient wine, well-balanced, dry and approachable," he says. This pairing, too, is a lesson in perfect balance.

Buffalo Chicken Wings & STELLA ARTOIS

8:59 pm: Time for a slow burn. Clerys executive chef Kelly Snogles, who also helms the kitchen at Brownstone next door, air-dries his never-frozen wings and drumettes in the fridge, which allows the skin to turn extra crispy when he bakes them. The process is more intensive than the usual double-deep-fried approach, but it's worth it. "It eliminates a lot of the grease," says Snogles. "They actually taste like chicken instead of deep fat fryer." Temper the sinus-scorching bite with an ice-cold Stella Artois—the lager's body is light enough not to bloat, and its crisp, ahh-inducing smack tames the wings' heat. Ask for extra napkins—just don't wipe your hands and your nose on the same one.

Suckling Pig Bao & GIN GIN MULE

10:03 pm: You're having fun, but you want to keep the good times rolling. Enter Shojo's magnificent suckling pig bao: a thick slice of juicy pork and bubbly crackling dressed with house-made bbq sauce and tangy-hot kimchi encased in fluffy sweet bread. Pair it with the Gin Gin Mule—consisting of house-made ginger beer, lemon juice, simple syrup and citrus-infused gin—to bring out the bright flavors of the kimchi and cut the fattiness of the pork.

Poutine & PIRAAT

11:39 pm: It's getting towards the hour when every idea is a good one. Amble down to Saus for a mess of frites with curds and gravy, and a Piraat, a Belgian IPA that's tamer than its American counterparts. "The hops complement the sharpness of the cheddar cheese curds while the malt highlights the richness and subtle sweetness of the veal- and chicken-based gravy," says co-owner Renee Eliah. This chaotic comfort food tastes like the tail end of Thanksgiving dinner, while the Piraat, with its 10.5% ABV, adds a spicy, slightly citrusy contrast to the meaty meal. Plus, millions of Quebecois agree that poutine makes for good padding against a hangover.

Late-Night Burger & GRAND FINALE CONCRETE

12:43 am: It's nearing last call. Your head is swimming, but perhaps your stomach is still adrift since your buddies ate all the poutine. End the night at JM Curley with a Grand Finale. This adult milkshake—or "concrete," as it sticks in the cup upside down like a DQ Blizzard—combines vanilla ice cream, cookie dough and blueberries soaked in Berkshire Bourbon. Pair it with a tangy late-night burger topped with a secret Russian dressing recipe from chef Sam Monsour's father. The shake both cleanses and coats your palate, masking the burger's smokiness. "The sweet with the salty, the ice-cold with the piping hot, the rich and creamy with the fatty and juicy. Whether drunk or sober, it hits the fing spot!" says Monsour. And he's fing right.

CLOWNING AROUND

SPRING IS IN THE AIR, AND so are trapeze artists and tightrope walkers when the Big Apple Circus returns to Boston with a brand-new act. Built from the ground up over the last three years, Legendarium celebrates the troupe's 35th anniversary while paying tribute to circuses past. A bicycle gang impresses with synchronized feats of strength; things get out of hand as a contortionist aims her bow and arrow using her feet. With every audience member sitting within 50 feet of the action, there's not a bad seat in the house. Toss your hat into the ring at City Hall Plaza through May 12.

SARAH HAGMAN

The Big Apple Circus performs through May 12 at City Hall Plaza, $25-$100 (888-541-3750, bigappleocircus.org).

Role Play

Maid of Honor Hollywood's Golden Age was anything but for black actresses, although oft-forgotten talents like Theresa Harris still brought panache to stereotype-ridden roles. Pulitzer-winning playwright Lynn Nottage drew inspiration from Harris' career for her latest work, By the Way, Meet Vera Stark. Combining screwball comedy and social commentary, the play follows the title character from her beginnings as a black maid with silver-screen dreams in the 1930s. When she and her white boss receive roles in the same film, the drama heats up off camera. Catch this Tinseltown tornado at the Lyric Stage Company through April 27. Jaclyn Diaz

Seeing Green

Leave it to Disney to make the adult heart ache with nostalgia for fleece. The Muppets was the film studio's first big-screen endeavor starring the endearing puppet troupe after acquiring the rights from the Jim Henson Company. When a greedy oil tycoon plans to destroy the defunct Muppet Theatre, a sentimental couple, played by Jason Segel and Amy Adams, team up with Kermit the Frog to reunite the estranged friends. Song, dance, hilarity and the troubled love of sassy Miss Piggy and Kermit unfold as the gang bands together for one last show to save their former home. Appease your inner child April 13 at the Brattle Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At West Newton.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Dead Man Down ★★ ½ This uniquely atonal disaster, directed by The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo's Niels Arden Oplev, is obviously a terrible movie. But it's a terrible movie I had an absolute blast watching. Colin Farrell stars as a Hungarian widower seeking vengeance on Terrence Howard's gang of slumlords through one of the more preposterously convoluted revenge plots in cinematic history. But his plans are briefly interrupted when nosy neighbor Noomi Rapace takes an iPhone video of him strangling one of Howard's henchmen and then tries to blackmail him into murdering the drunk driver who disfigured her in a car crash. Naturally, they fall in love. Oplev plays all this kitsch with such somber art house solemnity that it's inadvertently hilarious, and the hambone supporting turns from F. Murray Abraham and Isabelle Huppert suggest they're in on a joke nobody else is getting. Cartoonishly over-the-top action sequences battle for screen time with moody psychodrama, and the movie's New York City is such a geographic mishmash that the incongruity of the locales becomes surreal. (In the suburbs.)

G.I. Joe: Retaliation ★★ It's a few cuts above 2009's unwatchable G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra, and maybe the best movie anybody could make based on a cartoon that only existed to push Hasbro toys back in the 1980s. I'm not sure if that's damning with faint praise or just exhausted resignation. Dwayne Johnson gives another one of his endearing, overly sincere performances as the leader of an elite military squad suddenly under attack when a shape-shifting super-villain passes himself off as the president (Jonathan Pryce) and starts dropping bombs. There's also some stuff about ninjas. Dancer-turned-director Jon M. Chu, of Step Up sequel fame, at least keeps the tone agreeably stupid and the action easy to follow. Pryce hams it up with riffs on birther paranoia, but the most unintentionally amusing flourish is Bruce Willis' glorified cameo as a retired general turned survivalist gun nut. To call Willis' performance phoned-in would imply that he could be bothered to dial a phone. He looks disgusted that this movie even exists, and he's not alone. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gimme the Loot ★★★★ The most purely enjoyable movie I have seen since I can't remember when, writer/director Adam Leon's vibrant, rambunctious debut feature is so alive and full of mischief that most other films can't help but feel anemic in comparison. Ty Hickson and Tashiana Washington star as two small-time teenage graffiti artists from the Bronx, hoping to make a name for themselves by tagging the home-run apple at the Mets' Citi Field. What follows are two days of dizzy comic misadventures in petty crime, with an oddball rogues' gallery of classic NYC eccentrics taking turns stealing the show. Leon's New York is a gritty wonderland where anything can happen, and Gimme the Loot has a lot to say about race and class without making a big deal out of saying anything at all. Done wrong with a barely promoted one-week run at the Kendall Square Cinema, this little gem is thankfully also available via your local cable provider's IFC On Demand. Find it, and you can thank me later. (At Kendall Square and on Video On Demand.)

Ginger & Rosa ★★★ ½ As the Cuban missile crisis rages on, across the pond we've got an apocalypse of another kind in this autobiographical remembrance from writer/director Sally Potter. I'm afraid it's been lost in the shuffle of bigger, showier releases, but this is a fabulous film, vividly realized and anchored by a brilliant performance from young Elle Fanning, rendering the usual teen angst and disillusionment as something both deeply felt and oddly mysterious. Ginger's long road of disappointment is exacerbated by her friendship with the troubled Rosa, played here by Alice Englert, a steely screen presence who had little to do in the recent witchcraft swill Beautiful Creatures. The only spell she casts here is on Ginger's dad, whom Alessandro Nivola depicts with an awfully annoying air of self-serving moral superiority while making one bad decision after another. It wouldn't work without Fanning, who is so tough, transparent and aching. In one close-up after another, there exists a rollercoaster of emotions. Ginger's never as old or as wise as she thinks she is, but she's getting there. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

A Good Day to Die Hard ★ ½ The fifth and sorriest installment of the now 25-year-old franchise is so far removed from the excellent original that it should be called Die Hard in Name Only. Bruce Willis' New York cop John McClane, who, once upon a time, was vulnerable and charismatic, is now a bulletproof, sleepwalking bully, bulldozing his way through Russia, where his estranged son (Jai Courtney) is supposedly on trial for murder. After a prison-break car chase that occupies practically a third of the movie, we find out the kid is actually an undercover CIA agent, so he and his dear old dad spend the rest of the picture bickering about their family issues while being shot at by helicopters and jumping off exploding buildings, all without breaking a sweat. A Good Day to Die Hard is dumb, noisy and barely has enough story to support the 97 minutes of one-note cacophony. Willis snoozes along like a bored jerk. We're a long way from Nakatomi Plaza. (In the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (In the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (In the suburbs.)

Lore ★★★ ½ I guess I never stopped to wonder what happened to all those cuties in the Hitler Youth after their parents lost the war. This tough-minded, visceral picture from Australian director Cate Shortland follows a gaggle of stern Aryan kids abandoned after their S.S. officer parents are taken away by the Allies. We see all this through the eyes of the eldest, Hannalore, played with a sharp edge by Saskia Rosendahl. She's left in charge of leading her siblings—including a newborn baby—through the Black Forest to their grandmother's house, and the only help comes from a dashing young Jewish lad, which naturally pits Hannalore's burgeoning sexuality against her deeply ingrained bigotry. Germany immediately after the fall is a deadly maze of looting, violence and desperation, shot in tight, low-angle close-ups to approximate the characters' point of view. Lore is a tough, survivalist fable that stays with you. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

No ★★★ ½ Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer a TV-ad campaign for a referendum vote that just might kick Chile's brutal dictator Augusto Pinochet out of office. While idealists in the various political parties think the airtime should be used to expose Pinochet's atrocities, Bernal's boy wonder sells democracy as a product like any other—with rainbows, jingles, silly comedy sketches and even a mime. No's most cutting gag is just how much these political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good because the people casting votes are generally stupid. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Olympus Has Fallen ★ ½ The second worst Die Hard movie of the year finds Gerard Butler playing a disgraced Secret Service agent who becomes our country's last hope after some nasty North Korean terrorists blow up most of Washington D.C. and hold the president (Aaron Eckhart) hostage in the White House bunker. A deliberate throwback to junky mid-'90s thrillers like Air Force One and Executive Decision, Olympus Has Fallen severely misjudges the cheese-to-violence ratio, with Training Day director Antoine Fuqua lavishing his attention on innocents shredded by machine gun fire, cold-blooded executions and women being brutalized. It's hard to surrender to such a preposterous, cornball potboiler when your face is constantly rubbed in human suffering. Somebody also apparently miscalculated the budget, as this is the cheapest-looking movie in theaters right now. Bargain-basement CGI effects induce unintentional laughter, while the second half of the film is Gerard Butler skulking around under-lit hallways. There are a lot of solemn patriotic platitudes and Butler sticks his knife in people's skulls. Isn't crap like this supposed to be fun? (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper costars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Spring Breakers ★★★★ The latest outrageous provocation from Trash Humpers auteur Harmony Korine is sort of like what might happen if Jean-Luc Godard directed a Girls Gone Wild video. A toxic barrage of flesh, drugs and oceans of beer, the relatively plotless polemic finds three morally bankrupt college girls (Ashley Benson, Vanessa Hudgens and Rachel Korine) dragging their goody-goody best friend (Selena Gomez, who plays a gal so religious she's actually named Faith) on a mind-numbingly lurid spring-break bacchanal. They're bailed out of a jam by James Franco's white rapper Alien—the kind of instantly iconic character every dude in a dorm room is going to be for Halloween this year. Barely recognizable under the cornrows, oversized shades and grills on his teeth, Franco brings a contagious self-delight to his empty-headed machine-gun posture. Fetishizing the bikini-clad decadence with sumptuous cinematography, Korine wallows in the junk culture he's excoriating. In other words, the movie has its cake and then eats more cake. Breathtakingly edited in hypnotic patterns of repetition, Spring Breakers is some kind of sicko masterpiece. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no-B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (In the suburbs.)

The New Cold War

Lonely Hearts Club

Southern California's Cold War Kids have done the impossible: They've sold out without selling out. The indie-blues band has incorporated synth, piano and gospel into Dear Miss Lonelyhearts, their most recent album. For some musical groups, incorporating synth would mean a Ke$ha duet and a hip-hop beat. But Lonelyhearts remains sonically true with help from new guitarist Dann Gallucci, formerly of Modest Mouse. The album draws from Nathanael West's novel Miss Lonelyhearts, with lyrics that divulge moral struggles and emotional extremes. Broaden your literary and musical taste at the Paradise Rock Club on April 10.

Madeleine Coleman

Jump for Joystick

It's all fun and games until someone jumps off a building. The Game's Afoot: Video Game Art features six interactive works that explore the nature of art and pixelated play, courtesy of Rob Gonsalves, Victor Liu, and Anthony Montuori, whose game Into the Void challenges players to jump rooftops as French artist Yves Klein. Several games riff on the futility of our modern quests for success, with insurmountable college debt and unfulfilling careers taking the place of standard virtual foes. Maybe you can't win them all, but you can still play along at the Boston Cyberarts Gallery through April 14.

Big Fat Greek Funeral

Willful Thinking

When it comes to keeping secrets, apparently mother knows best. Calliope Notaris Brown, named after the Muse of poetry, discovers her uncle from Greece has passed away, leaving her everything. The Clover House sends Calliope to the old country to find what her mother has been trying to keep hidden for so many years. What she uncovers opens up a tale of deceit, fear and mystery leading back to a fateful night during World War II. Henriette Lazaridis Power explores a complicated mother-daughter relationship infused with her own upbringing in Greek-American culture. Honor thy mother at Porter Square Books on April 16.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com]* Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

THE IN CROWD

Rubbing Elbows

Everyone who's anyone was there, and we firmly believe that everyone is somebody.

That's a nice way of saying that the opening of RH, which benefited the Boys and Girls Clubs and the Museum of Fine Arts, was, to put it mildly, cozy.

Several thousand people were invited, and several thousand showed up. Among them: real estate titan Steve Weiner and the flawless Roberta, arts booster Joyce Kulhawik, Celtics grand poobah Wyc Grousbeck and the gorgeous Corinne, Bruins legend Cam Neely and brunette bombshell Paulina, art collector Sheryl Marshall, wisenheimer John Keith and the dead sexy Terry Lighte, famed architect David Hacin and his handsome hubby, Tim Graft, the beyond beautiful Mary Jean Keany and the dashing Paul, Newbury Street tastemaker John Stefanelli and pretty much all of creation. As one guest put it, "They must've used the phonebook for the guest list."

Bellinis and mini lobster rolls circulated among the masses, and some brave souls dared to ascend to the second and third floors. Before long, the fire marshal shut the whole thing down, which resulted in awkward moments, like people whose names were on the invitation not being able to get in.

All of which resulted in it being the party people are still talking about, which, if you're opening a store, is really all that matters.

There's Always Laser

The most hirsute party in recent memory was the Mustachio Bashio, held at City Table in the Lenox Hotel.

For a month, participants avoided taking a razor to their upper lips to raise money for Community Servings, and at the party, their efforts were assessed by guests and guest judge Jenny Johnson.

Prominent among the throng: Snidely Whiplash doppelgänger John O'Connor, adorable scamp Peter Maglia, smoldering sex bomb Kyle Smith, the delectable Catherine Stanton Schiff, the always delightful Hal Langell and the lovely Micaela Boyd with her ultra-hairy husband, Peter (organizer of the Boston Facial Hair Fiasco).

"My grandmother had a more impressive mustache," said one guest, while another asked, "Do you think that woman knows this isn't a unibrow competition?"

Catherine Stanton Schiff and Jenny Johnson at the Mustachio Bashio

Kyle Smith at the Mustachio Bashio

D and Candice Gatti at Hei La Moon

Edward Garmey and Christian Bailey at Hei La Moon

Sherry Vine and Jeff Merselis at Climacts!

However, the funniest remark came from the man who said, "I've never tried to grow a mustache, but you should see the hair on my back."

Gong Hai Fat Choy

The winter's blizzards might've thrown a few things off, but they couldn't stop the Academy of the Pacific Rim from celebrating the Year of the Snake, even if it was a few months after Chinese New Year.

The event, held at Hei La Moon in Chinatown, attracted the likes of the hale and hearty Billy Bulger, international man of mystery Christian Bailey, keynote speaker Leverett Wing, the dazzling duo of Cate Fortier and Gretchen Centurelli, biotech bigwig Edward Garmey, his lovely wife, Sophia, her parents, Hal and Margaret Carroll, banking behemoth Dave Gatti with the lovely Candice, über-do-gooder Charlotte Golar Richie and her husband, Wilson, and one woman who looked at her cellphone and said, "My boss just butt-dialed me."

A banquet befitting an emperor was accompanied by performances by students from the academy. And as one guest noted, the keynote speech was a bit long, "But at least it included a reference to Austin Powers."

Subtlety Be Damned

Easily the most outrageous bash of the year, the Theater Offensive's annual Climacts! benefit puts the "gay" in gala.

At the Rumor nightclub, drag superstar Sherry Vine emceed (in addition to performing her hit "You're a Whore"), and celebrity DJ Cazwell spun, surrounded by popsicle-licking go-go boys. As always, the live auction included the chance to act as a fluffer on a porn shoot, although this year, the porn stars were actually there, in the persons of Maverick Men Cole and Hunter. Also on hand: lesbian laugh-riot Marga Gomez, the irresistible Paul Twitchell, Cambridge chatelaine Joan Parker, the dangerous duo of Dan Avery and Benson Willis, arts patron Arnold Sapenter, smoke show Jeff Merselis, puckish publicist Bryan Barbieri, and one man with a much younger boyfriend, who said, "Thank God for daddy issues."

One guest asked his friend if he wanted to grab dinner, to which the friend responded, "A girl can't live on chocolate-dipped bananas alone." However, the evening's most arch remark came from the person who said, "We used to travel in the same circles... back in the days when I was less circular." ×××

Point of Pride

Adam DeTour

In the past week, there's been a lot of talk about Boston's resilience. It's true, our daily lives involve snow emergencies, the taste of Dunkin' Donuts coffee and left-hand merges onto Storrow Drive. Our skins have thickened while waiting for the T to arrive, to say nothing of our patience during that whole World Series business. We think "wicked" actually means something positive. But we've never seen anything like we did on April 15.

If the past few days have proven a single point, it's that our city's famous pride is grounded in more than sports championships. When we look back on the mettle and compassion so many Bostonians showed last week, it's hard not to let that New England flintiness slip a little, to let that pride well up around the edges of our eyes. It's hard not to feel overwhelming gratitude for our city's instinctive decency, rationality and grace. It's hard not to love Boston even more.

Another fact about Bostonians is that we don't tolerate bullies. If someone tries to stop us from running 26 miles to the point of gastrointestinal distress, we lace up our sneakers. That's why we're going to start training for next year's marathon. That's why, next April, we'll be cheering in the crowd at the finish line.

THE BIG PICTURE

HOLLYWOOD TAKES, SAY, ONE-AND-a-half years to make a film. By 48 Hour Film Project's standards, that's 273 films short. Now in its 12th year, this touring event hosts frantic weekendlong film festivals throughout the world, with competing teams writing, filming, editing and scoring their productions in just 48 hours. On May 3, some 75 teams (that's roughly a thousand filmmakers) gather at Lir on Boylston Street to join the moviemaking madness before the screenings on May 7–9.

"Mark Twain said that he was looking for good stories well told. Well, so are we," says Boston chapter producer Ben Guaraldi, who's been with the project since its second year. "We also look for films that entertain us, that make us laugh or that move us. And the higher a film's stakes, the better."

To ensure that participants don't cut corners and start producing before the kickoff, each team receives a character, a prop and a line of dialogue they have to incorporate into the film. They also draw a genre such as B-movie, mistaken identity or superhero. They have 48 hours to complete an entire movie.

Guaraldi's seen a lot of strange moments. For instance, there "was the team that made a film about cross-dressing vampires transforming back and forth between suit-wearing straight-laced people." (It's called Love Bites.) He estimates that about 70 percent of the films are completed on time. Though he's never participated in the project himself, Guaraldi's made four films for the National Film Challenge, a sister competition. "It's comparatively relaxing," he says. "You get 77 hours instead of 48!"

Open Sesame

Fugu's bright blue truck rolled out this month with the city's best new noodle dish. Chef-owner Bing Liu, who trained in France, in New York, and behind the sushi bar at Oishii, makes Sichuan sesame noodles the way he learned in his native China. He tosses chilled, hand-pulled wheat strands with crispy bits of pork or shredded chicken, julienned cucumber and carrots, a handful of scallions, sesame seeds and a homemade chili oil dressing that's rich and roasty. Made to order, it's got just the right touch of fire.

BACK IN BLACK

SELLING A WELL-KNOWN restaurant is like handing off a baton in a relay: You want to make a smooth transfer to someone who can hit the ground running and maintain standards. That's why, after almost 20 years in the kitchen, Paul O'Connell, chef-owner of Chez Henri in Cambridge, is happy to "pass the torch," as he puts it, to Dylan Black. Black is best known as the proprietor of Green Street in Central Square, but he's also tended bar at Chez Henri. He says, "Paul and I have been holding hands on this [the sale] for a long time."

Black plans to bring on board Green Street's executive chef, Greg Reeves, and keep the Latin emphasis on the food, with a stronger focus on steak. O'Connell says there's no other steak-centric place in the neighborhood (unless you count Frank's, which many people wouldn't). Black is "a great operator," he adds. Chez Henri is slated to be taken over in mid-summer and renamed. What not to expect: "Fin' poutine fries," growls O'Connell.

Out in Needham, the former location of a Bickford's (and before that, an International House of Pancakes) is being revamped into an independent eatery whose local owner describes it as "the institution it was always meant to be." Needham native Aaron Krug says he expects to open 3 Squares by mid-June. Chef Steve Adan, whose résumé includes stints at the Capital Grille and Tavern in the Square, is creating a menu Krug says will include such items as "great eclectic salads, apple-pie-stuffed French toast, and braised short-rib eggrolls," all "with approachable price points."

KEEP PALM AND CARRY ON

Suits rejoice—the power lunch is back. But it's moved from Back Bay to the Financial District. The Palm, which closed its doors nearly two years ago, is set to reopen on May 16 in its new location at One International Place.

The restaurant's brand is modernizing, with its Boston location representing the first of what general manager Brian Brosnihan calls "a new generation of the Palm." He cites the 30-foot ceilings as one of a few changes guests can expect to see from the 87-year-old establishment. The iconic framed caricatures are going to be scaled back since the new space features granite throughout and an entire wall of windows.

The 8,300-square-foot space also features two function rooms and a 75-seat enclosed patio that Brosnihan hopes will open for three full seasons. "It's just a really nice setting," he says.

Though the look of the brand may be changing, the taste isn't. "The menu that's already been established is such an important part of who we are," says executive chef Karen Mitchell, a veteran of Legal Sea Foods. "So I don't want to touch a thing. With that being said, we know what things are important to New Englanders, and with my experience working with seafood for so long, I feel that I can bring some New England-focused features."

Mitchell hints that this could mean a raw bar and weekend clambakes during the summer. For now, guests can order the Palm's traditional Power Lunch, a three-course meal that includes choices such as filet mignon medallions with a Bordelaise sauce or Atlantic salmon fillet with red pepper sauce and mango salsa.

Other items include the classic Palm sides—creamed spinach, asparagus fritti with lemon garlic butter—as well as newer ones like three-cheese potatoes au gratin and beefsteak tomato capri with fresh basil and imported mozzarella. There's also the Cloak & Dagger, a grilled variation on a Rachel sandwich. It's sure to slay you.

Q&A

COPTALK

Officer Myles Lawton stars in TNT's reality show, Boston's Finest.

What clues do you look for when pursuing a criminal?

In the gang unit, we deal with a lot of intelligence gathering, so what we tend to do is get out and really know these kids. It's not so much just looking for the clue; it's getting to understand the kids that we deal with on an individual basis, and those kind of become the clues. If I talk to a kid all the time and every time I see him, he comes up to me, "Hey Myles, how you doing," and then the 10th time he doesn't want to talk to me and he's acting kind of funny, that's a clue. It's not like Sherlock Holmes, [where] they're gonna leave something behind for you to pick up and figure out.

What's easier: Putting your six kids to bed or chasing down a criminal?

Chasing down a criminal all day is easier than putting six kids to bed. Granted, they're good about their bedtime, but the criminal has a goal, which is to get away. My goal is to catch them. Dealing with six people with six personalities, they all have their own individual goals. But it's way more fun being around six kids than it is a criminal any day of the week.

Has being filmed while in uniform affected your job at all?

It's come in handy like I hoped it would, actually. Dealing with some of the youth we deal with, now they understand that I wasn't born with a silver spoon in my mouth. These kids that we deal with, they're from lower-income to middle-income families. Maybe single-family homes, maybe they're being raised by their grandparents. They think our lives are perfect and we also are the people that solve everybody else's problems. We have problems of our own, and I think [the show] exposed that a little bit and they got to see that, and it made us more real and more human. So that's actually helped open up some dialogue.

Lit Up

Litographs
litographs.com

Lots of us have tattered posters and T-shirts lingering from our college days. Ditch the dorm-room detritus in favor of something from Litographs, whose prints and tees are works of art—and of literature. Launched in September of 2011 to coincide with Banned Books Week, the Cambridge-based line debuted with seven posters featuring text from frequently censored tomes, such as Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and On the Origin of Species. It's since added dozens of titles and tapped artists from Brookline to Bangkok and Sydney to Singapore, whose designs are translated into text by Litographs' proprietary software. In January—with help from a Kickstarter campaign that brought in more than $100,000—Litographs delivered its first T-shirt designs.

"It very quickly became clear that there is a real demand for tangible literary merchandise and a real nostalgia for bringing text that's increasingly digital back into the physical world," says 24-year-old founder Danny Fein, a bibliophile and self-taught programmer bitten by the "tech-startup bug" who'll begin studying at Harvard Business School in the fall. Litographs, he says, is about "giving people a way to express their passion for books, in the same way they're able to for music and movies, where there are tons of band T-shirts and movie posters." Plus, each purchase allows the nonprofit International Book Bank to send a new book to a community in need abroad. On the horizon are tote bags, a revamped website and, of course, new titles. "We're very focused on expanding our collection," Fein says, "because everyone has their favorite book."

PEPPER SQUAD

Alex Bourgeois is something of a hot-sauce chemist. The software engineer turned chile aficionado spent years experimenting with different peppers until he hit on the precise formulas for his quartet of Ugly Sauces, which he produces at JP's Crop Circle Kitchen. Habaneros, he says, bring "quick, front-of-the-mouth heat." He uses them exclusively in his hottest sauce, but pairs them with "darker, smokier" serranos and cayenne in the Original. He adds Thai dragon chiles to his Dragon sauce, bringing a "fruity" burn to the tip of the tongue and leaving the back taste buds to focus on a honey base. Novice heat-seekers may want to start with his Milder sauce, made with cayenne and serranos, and work their way up the Scoville scale.

Impersonals GOING VIRAL

TO THOSE IN MY VICINITY AT MY OFFICE: It's cold season. People are sneezing constantly. I get that you're trying to be polite, ward off the evil spirits, blah blah blah, but is it really necessary for a chorus of four or five of you to emphatically say "Bless you" every single time somebody sneezes? After a while, it's no longer courteous. It's overkill, annoying and quite frankly a little distracting. Please, just blessing in moderation would be much appreciated.

Distracted by do-gooders

To those two uppity bungholes on Maple Street in Malden: Thanks for your compassion lately! (You can find the definition in the book Compassion for Idiots.)

Connie

To the little girl on the unicycle: We get it, you have great balance. But the "yeah, that's right" look you give pedestrians almost guarantees that one day someone is going to shove you off that thing. Just looking out for you, kid.

Concerned citizen

To all the patio diners: It's still cold out. Fifty-six degrees is warmer than what we've been enduring, I will give you that. But that's all I will give you. So please, go home, change out of your shorts and go eat INSIDE. You look ridiculous pushing your salad around because you're too cold to lift up your fork.

Waiting for summer

To college kids in the Common: Yes, we had one day of 65-degree weather, so why not pull out your shorts, but please do not pull off your shirts. Bikinis in Boston are a strange habit any month of the year, but in April, it's just insane.

Still wearing a sweater

To the runners of Boston: Who wears short shorts? Apparently every male runner in Boston over the age of 40. Most of you pair these shorts with a long-sleeve jumper, leading me to believe that you aren't wearing them for the right reasons. Please help make Boston a better place by not shopping at the kids' section.

Drink of the Moment

UNDOUBTEDLY GOOD

NAME: Trust Her

PRICE: $11

INVENTORS: Bar manager Adam Foss and chef Prescia Cooper

INGREDIENTS: Tito's Handmade Vodka, basil, pineapple, lemon garnish

CONCEPT: A summery martini that doesn't sink into the sugared ooze of flavored vodka.

DOES IT WORK? Yes. The gluten-free vodka is infused with fresh pineapple and basil for about three weeks, leaving it gently sweet, with an inflection of herbs. "We tried using dry basil and pineapple," says Foss, who works as an attorney by day. "But everything you get is that flavor." A fresh ingredient tastes less concentrated than a dry one, so the liquor is fragrant rather than cloying.

TASTE: A former pastry chef at the restaurant raved to Foss about a pineapple-basil dessert she'd encountered. "It was a risk," admits Foss, who was skeptical at first. Then he tasted the combination and, simultaneously, named the drink.

CONTEXT: Foss developed his liquor skills working through law school by tending bar in Cambridge. "I trained in a sophisticated palette," he says. "Bourbons. Muddling. When I got here, [the clientele] wanted sweet, cheap drinks. I thought [the Trust Her] was a great way to generate new business, without artificial liquors." Hence his program's affinity for fresh fruit and infusions.

PAIR IT WITH: Roasted haddock with corn chowder. "But we're really well known for chicken wings and catfish strips," Foss says.

BENCH IMPRESS

KNOCK ON WOOD Urban Island

Fort Point Channel's nearing a boiling point, thanks to a host of hot new destinations. But the latest enticement to the waterfront 'hood isn't a marquee restaurant, a craft brewery or a fancy-pants grocer. This month, we're pumped for park benches. Seriously. Urban lawn furniture is getting a major upgrade courtesy of Design Museum Boston's Street Seats Design Challenge, which drew 170 high-concept seating submissions from 23 countries. On April 27, the 20 semifinalists' finished benches make their debut at the Boston Harborwalk, at a free opening bash complete with food trucks, live music and tours, plus the announcement of the prize winners.

There won't be standard wooden slats and wrought iron. New York's Pillow Culture alludes to Fort Point's nautical history with its Knot Bench, a chartreuse snarl of recycled plastic rope offering three seating positions with different heights and views. Boston's Make Stuff Lab drew inspiration from the aquatic hues beneath the Evelyn Moakley Bridge for its Chroma Bench, whose panels appear to shift shades from blue to green as you walk by. North Carolinian Eugene Duclos' Wright Bench doubles as a bike rack and takes its shape from an airplane wing. (The name nods to the Wright brothers, who ran a bicycle shop before they took flight.) And Boston's Moskow Linn Architects used reclaimed wood from Fort Point for its Urban Island, whose sinuous silhouette arose from artist Josef Albers' drawings of smoke. All are made from environmentally friendly materials and accompanied by signage and QR codes that shed light on the design process. The exhibition is on view through early October, so there's plenty of time to have a stylish seat.

Wine

Primo Pinot

Pinot noir has been on a roll for the past several years and is now a star grape variety. This Burgundy native is the newfound darling of vineyard owners wherever growing conditions are sufficiently dry in the spring, and cool throughout the season, to ripen it slowly and evenly. The remarkable thing about our passion for pinot is that the grape remains challenging to grow, and it's virtually impossible to produce an inexpensive wine from it that tastes authentic. So true devotees appear willing to pay a bit for the handcrafted good stuff.

The grape has ridden the crest of popularity of seafood, and of more healthy dining habits in general. Its tantalizing aromas and delicate, soft red-fruit flavors balance beautifully with lighter fare. The following three are among my favorite mid- to higher-priced food-friendly U.S. pinot noirs. Each will harmonize with any special dinner.

ADELSHEIM PINOT NOIR, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2010

($30, WINE CASK, SOMERVILLE)

One of the pioneers of the Oregon wine industry, Adelsheim remains a benchmark of finely structured, tart but supple pinot. The 2010 vintage was unusually cold in the northern Willamette. Reflecting this, Adelsheim produced a raspberry-like, savory wine with hints of beetroot, tea leaf and white pepper. On the palate it displays a fresh, energetic vibrancy and a touch so light and agile that it might surprise you how persistently the flavors linger. Delicious with grains and vegetables, it also complements delicately prepared white fish.

($75, BOSTON WINE EXCHANGE)

Talk about pedigree—this is from the folks who brought you the iconic Far Niente cabernets and Chardonnays. Originating largely from the Russian River's sandy loam Goldridge soils, EnRoute is a pinot that is right on target: velvety smooth with black cherry, clove and vanilla notes. This is a fuller wine that expresses the lush richness of pinot's personality. Soft in tannin, but intense and concentrated, it ages for almost a year in 50 percent new French oak barrels. I enjoyed it immensely with a peppery roasted arctic char and braised pork cheeks.

SONOMA-CUTRER PINOT NOIR, RUSSIAN RIVER VALLEY, 2008

($26, CAMBRIDGE WINE & SPIRITS)

The Russian River Valley, with its cool, foggy Pacific breezes, may just be the spiritual home of pinot noir in the Western Hemisphere. Sonoma-Cutrer makes an earthy, mushroomy medium-bodied wine with spicy cherry-like vibrancy, bright fruit extraction and a sharp core of balancing acid. It turns out that the renowned Chardonnay specialists have a particularly deft touch with pinot as well. Classically styled, this wine requires some air; it expands in the glass after the first sip to express an impressive range of juicy berry flavors, with hints of cinnamon and tobacco. A salmon accompaniment if ever there was one, it's also delicious with roast chicken.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Beauty

The Brighter Hide

With shoulder-baring weather just around the corner, ditch the lackluster complexion for a bronzed sheen. Aurora Peritz, regional spa manager at Equinox, dishes on a body scrub that's worth its salt. Salt is "a great way to prepare your dry winter skin for summer, whether you tan naturally [or] use a sunless tan option," Peritz says.

A tan without prior exfoliation pales in comparison. Taking the extra step to scrub beforehand prevents streaking and ensures a consistent application that typically lasts three to four days longer, Peritz says. It'll also have your skin glowing as the salt stimulates new cell growth, revealing a smoother, more even skin tone. It helps the acne-prone, too, by unclogging pores and helping makeup and skincare products go on better.

Here's the rub down with the Body Glow Salt Scrub at Equinox that Peritz recommends: The 50-minute treatment uses a mineral-rich solution with moisturizing oils and vitamin E, applied to the body with circular motions to buff away dead skin cells. This is followed by a gentler micro-exfoliating scrub, made specifically for the neck and face, which is then removed with hot towels before a shower. The experience ends with an all-over moisturizing treatment, priming your bod for bronzing. And with that, there's no need to hide those gams in pants anymore.

THAT EBEN ALEXANDER IS A neurosurgeon makes his coma-induced flight into a mystical and almost psychedelic realm even more fascinating. His seven-day "afterlife," the result of a dire bout with meningitis, could be dubbed the "afterknife," a paradigm entirely separate from his scientific framework.

Here, the white blood cells that swarm to his inflamed brain become angels of beauty. After he passes through "The Realm of the Earthworm's Eye-View," a dark, grungy, evil place, he enters the light-spangled dimension he calls "The Gateway." He writes that God, whom he calls "Om," "spoke to me through thoughts that were like wave walls, rolling through me." And a "Girl on a Butterfly Wing" offers comforting and philosophical friendship.

Proof of Heaven
By Eben Alexander, M.D.

Alexander worked at Brigham and Women's Hospital.

Alexander interweaves medical descriptions with his evocations of the gorgeous "out there" he visits as his body lies nearly dead. Other aspects of his life—especially his own adoption—resonate uncannily during his adventure. When Alexander's eyes snap open, he contemplates his staggering experience using his brick-solid science. Given that his neocortex was out of business during the coma, he questions each possible hypothesis and concludes that his "mind beyond the body," his spirit, had been in a spiritual place apart. ✖✖✖

MAINE COURSE

Beyond lobster bakes at Kennebunk Beach's White Barn Inn

VENTING GREEN One of the White Barn Inn's garden rooms

IRELAND HAS PUBS. ITALY HAS churches. The Cayman Islands have untaxed corporate profits. Southern Maine, for its part, is thick with chef-driven fine dining destinations, from Portland's fabled Fore Street to Ken Oringer's Earth at Hidden Pond. If you drive an hour and a half north on I-95 you can hardly turn without tripping over a tasting menu reflecting local products and seasonal flavors. One of the most refined of these culinary trawls—in creativity, in execution, in sheer taste—is at the White Barn Inn in Kennebunk Beach.

Located opposite a Lithuanian monastery and set far enough from the sea to eliminate any whiff of beach, the inn is centered on an 1820 barn that's traded its chickens and hay bales for Schott Zwiesel crystal and pan-roasted Rohan duck with Sauternes froth. The rest of the property, too, is an amalgam of old and new: A Victorian main house conceals plush, contemporary rooms while outlying buildings center on a natural stone pool and assiduous landscaping. For a dip into Olde New England, ask for a junior suite in May's Annex, a converted carriage house with an emphasis on traditional upholstery and knickknacks. The Blue suite, for example, is spangled with Asian-inflected prints that seem less Edo period than The Mikado. There are deep, oversized jacuzzis, walk-in rain showers and the granite and marble fixtures you'd expect from a Relais & Chateaux property. You can lie in a down-topped king bed while surfing movies on the plasma TV. But the wallpaper, antique prints and crowded bookshelves hark back to a time before Molton Brown bath products.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Although some of the rooms feature wood-burning fireplaces, not all ventilation is created equal. Be cautious of closed windows.

This is rustic, but it's not uncivilized. Men require jackets in the restaurant.

After checking in, make sure you visit the library, where a flawless afternoon tea is served at 3 pm. The finger sandwiches are reason enough to claim an armchair by the fire, but the homemade pastries settle any argument. Finish with a glass of port, but don't dull your appetite. The reason you've braved the toll roads awaits in the barn.

Awards can be arbitrary, but it's worth noting that the White Barn Inn Restaurant is the only kitchen north of New York City to boast a AAA Five Diamond rating as well as five stars from Forbes. (Yes, but how's the rabbit loin strudel? Meaty, yet as delicate as if it had been spun from sugar.) There's an emphasis on service, with an individual waiter dedicated to each guest, and the wine program is aggressively broad.

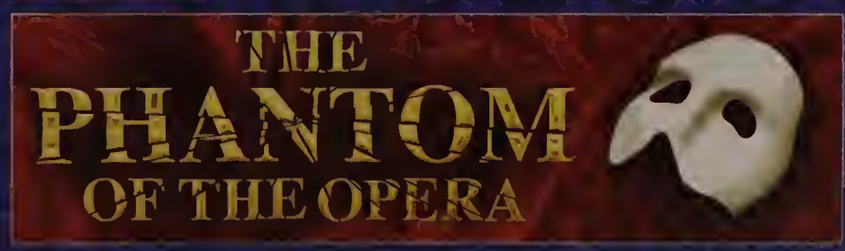
Step past the bar and piano, under a tall lattice of rafters, to view the exhaustive collection of antique animal wood carvings perched in the lofts above the dining tables, which are crisply linened and candlelit. There're oil paintings and old farmhouse implements, but the eye is mostly drawn to the grand picture windows overlooking the landscaping. Or it is until you see the menu.



Chef Jonathan Cartwright is an Englishman with a résumé that spans the Black Forest, Puerto Rico and Massachusetts' own Blantyre in Lenox. He's been at the White Barn for most of his time in a toque, so he's gotten to know the local lobsters. And the cows. And the parsnips. Every week, he and his 16-strong team engineer a menu to showcase Maine foodstuffs and European kitchen wizardry, so a dinner can feature the homey (onion and white port soup), the classic (quail breast with foie gras and apricots with cashew butter and cognac thyme reduction) and the tweaked out (roast monkfish and lobster sausage with kale, saffron froth and lobster velouté). Splurge on the tasting menu with wine pairings for an indoctrination into why pork belly is meant to cohabit with McLaren Vale Shiraz, or why salmon carpaccio is elevated by Sancerre. And do not skip dessert. In addition to a cheese board worth the price of a few clogged arteries, no one should squander the chance to taste goat's milk cheesecake with beet ice cream and raspberry vodka gel.

Afterward, lurch back to your room reflecting that free bicycles and kayaks are available for some needed exercise in the morning. Or you could simply do breakfast in bed. For a glutton's progress, the White Barn Inn demands a pilgrimage. ×××

CHOWDOWN

The best course(s) to take at Brazilian meat emporium Fogo de Chão

Fogo de Chão
200 Dartmouth St., Boston
(617-585-6300)
fogodechao.com

SLICE OF LIFE An endless parade of meats and sides means you'll likely want to make this your only meal of the day.

PICTURE IT: MORE THAN 16 cuts of roasted meat, at least 30 items at the salad bar, and unlimited carb-packed hot sides. But if you enter New England's only location of upscale Brazilian churrascaría chain Fogo de Chão without a strategy, you might leave full but unsatisfied. While the restaurant looks like a cavernous hotel lobby with its polished wood, generic art and padded chairs, it's really a circus of meat in which some acts deserve your attention more than others. There's a primal pull in this spectacle. Counter it with rational preparation.

Since the same courses are offered at lunch and dinner, and since you'll most likely be eating only once that day, opt for a drawn-out lunch on a weekday for $30.50 instead of paying nearly $20 more for an evening or weekend meal. And ask to sit near the kitchen, where you'll have a view of the salad offerings and the first glimpse of the meat swords wielded by the restaurant's costumed gauchos. Drinks are extra but worth it, especially for the house caipirinha ($11) with its generous pour of cachaça and muddled lime to cut the meal's richness.

Ease into the gluttony with a selective foray into the salad bar offerings ($24.50, salad only). It's tempting to see the array of vegetables, such as thick asparagus spears and hearts of palm and artichoke, as well as cold meats like aged prosciutto and cured lox, as distractions from your main objective. Instead, think of the salad items as intermissions that reset the focus of the next act, allowing your palate a respite while you await the star turns.

Although Cambridge's moderately priced Midwest Grill includes interesting offal such as chicken hearts and tongues in its lineup, it also brings out its best items so infrequently that you might not even get a chance to try them. Fogo doesn't make this mistake, and compensates for its offal deficit by parading all of its proteins at a clipped, even overwhelming, pace. Before you listen to your server's introductory spiel about turning your card from green to red to halt the gaucho visits, make friends with the shiny menu so you can recognize the cuts.

Choose the top-sirloin cuts—the picanha and alcatra—and the lamb chops instead of the tasteless filet mignon and rubbery leg of lamb. Recognizable as a C-shaped wedge of meat on its skewer, the best meat is the signature picanha—especially the version simply seasoned with salt, rather than the one obscured with a garlic glaze. Every slice was tender and medium-rare as requested. The gauchos are supposedly adept at carving to your requested level of doneness, but in reality they have very little control over how cooked your slice is—which is why sitting near the kitchen, before the proteins have time to internally cook as they're walked through the restaurant, is so important. Like the picanha, the alcatra was also juicy and perfectly seasoned, if a little less tender. Besides the leg of lamb, other non-thrilling cuts on which you shouldn't waste stomach space are the tough fraldinha (bottom sirloin), the bacon-wrapped chicken and the dry lombo (pork) with Parmesan cheese. But both the chicken thighs and the beef ribs proved to be solid, flavorful choices.

Another tip: Ask for some of the minty house chimichurri sauce and the fiery hot sauce. Both are only available by request and inject personality into the gastronomic march, which can turn into a slog as your belly becomes uncomfortably full. Those sauces, as well as the excellent pão de queijo, a warm cheese bread replenished as soon as it runs low, are great reminders that there's more to Brazilian food than meat alone. ✖✖✖

Q: I AM NOT HAPPY WITH THE LOOSE SKIN ON MY NECK; WHAT CAN BE DONE ABOUT "TURKEY NECK"?

A: Many of our clients state that their neck is the area of most concern regarding their appearance, but are not interested in a having a facelift or surgical procedure.

Luckily, there is a new type of procedure called RF Skin Tightening which gives amazing results and really tightens up loose skin on the neck and jowls.

RF uses radio frequency energy so it is safe, non-invasive and there is no downtime.

Our RF procedure can also be used to tighten up skin elsewhere on the body such as the around the eyes, stomach, above the knees, and under the arms. Call us today for a free consultation.

AHEAD OF THE GAME

IFF Boston
April 24–30 at the Somerville, Brattle and Coolidge Corner theatres, UMass Boston and Theatre 1. To purchase tickets, visit iffboston.org.

TAKE IT FROM SOMEBODY who goes to a lot of film festivals—we're spoiled here. Every April, the Independent Film Festival Boston brings world-class talent and a dazzling array of movies to town, but you won't find any of the noxious industry-insider posturing that plagues most fests of this size and scope. This is a local operation with an all-volunteer staff, put on for the community. IFFBoston returns for its 11th year to its regular haunts at the Brattle, Coolidge Corner and Somerville theatres, and just added a couple of new venues at UMass Boston and the Revere Hotel's Theatre 1. From April 24 to 30, there are 120 or so screenings as well as free panel discussions. And I can tell you from experience that the parties aren't too shabby, either.

Our cover boy Casey Affleck has just come on board this year as a creative adviser, and he'll be out and about for the festivities. Program director Adam Roffman and his tireless crew have put together a characteristically impressive and eclectic mix of fiction, documentary, features and shorts. And where else do you get to rub elbows with the filmmakers after the show?

An old friend of the festival, Bobcat Goldthwait, who was here in 2009 with World's Greatest Dad, and again last year with God Bless America, returns for the world premiere of Willow Creek, a cinema verité mockumentary about Bigfoot sightings. But I've been told that, as we've come to expect from a Goldthwait picture, the real subject here is social satire, and that these Sasquatch stories are a means of exploring faith and religion in America. Willow Creek is automatically on my must-see list simply because there's nobody who can handle a post-screening Q&A quite like Bobcat.

How does one follow up The Avengers? If you're Joss Whedon, you invite all your cool friends over to your house and act out your favorite Shakespeare play. Shot in black and white at the director's home, Much Ado About Nothing puts a modern-dress spin on the bard's sunniest comedy, with a cast from Whedon's stock company that includes fan favorites Nathan Fillion, Clark Gregg and Amy Acker. Maybe this will expunge the still-traumatic memories of Keanu Reeves mumbling iambic pentameter in Kenneth Branagh's 1993 version?

It wouldn't be a proper film festival without a Greta Gerwig movie. (I actually tried to hit on her at an IFFBoston party back in 2007, but let's just say that didn't work out.) Frances Ha, writer/director Noah Baumbach's follow-up to the Gerwig-starring Greenberg, casts the gawky muse as a hapless 20-something drifting through New York City, fighting off adulthood. If the premise doesn't already sound familiar, Girls star Adam Driver is on hand as a love interest. Hopefully he's more well-adjusted on the big screen than he is on TV.

Also returning to the fest is local hero Andrew Bujalski, who brought Mutual Appreciation in 2005 and Beeswax in 2009, and is generally credited with kicking off the mumblecore movement. But his latest, Computer Chess, is unlike any Bujalski movie you've seen before. It's actually unlike any movie you've seen before, full stop. A period piece set in the early 1980s and shot on era-specific U-Matic black and white videotape, this deliriously offbeat curiosity chronicles a conference where researchers pit their early-model artificial intelligence programs against one another, tournament-style. The winner gets to challenge an actual chess master, played here with magnificent condescension by Boston film critic Gerald Peary. Computer Chess confounded and delighted Sundance audiences. I was in the latter camp.

Other notables that made the journey from Park City to Davis Square include The Way, Way Back, starring Steve Carell as a bad stepdad and Sam Rockwell as an unlikely mentor for a teenage boy working at a water park. Then there's Crystal Fairy, with Michael Cera and Gaby Hoffman quaffing cactus-juice hallucinogens in Chile, and the crowd-pleasing documentary Twenty Feet From Stardom, which finally shines a spotlight on all the backup singers whose voices you've heard on so many hit singles.

Lake Bell is one of those actresses you'll recognize from countless mediocre comedies, but probably can't place her name. That should all change after In a World, the festival's closing-night movie, which Bell wrote, directed and starred in. In case the title didn't tip you off, it's a comedy about the cutthroat backstage world of voice-over artists, and features the great Fred Melamed (A Serious Man's Sy Ableman) in a role described as the Yoda of trailer narrators.

Of course, those are just some of the big-ticket pictures. What I love most about IFFBoston is the thrill of discovery, just walking into a movie cold and finding a new talent. That doesn't happen at a lot of other festivals, since it only works when the programmers have excellent taste. ✖✖✖

PROLIFIC PLAYMATES

Californian school chums obsessively recast echoes of different eras in smart pop collages.

Foxygen
plays the Brighton Music Hall on May 7.

FOXYGEN REVIVES CLASSIC-rock spells with a youthful joie de vivre on its charming new album, We Are the 21st Century Ambassadors of Peace & Magic. However, when it comes to the "we" in the title, guitarist Jonathan Rado declines to accept the role of groovy ambassadors.

"I don't know if we are anymore," Rado says of himself and singer Sam France, both 23, co-founders of the psychedelic folk-pop outfit. "I think that's on everyone else at this point."

His hesitation to embrace the cheeky designation comes in the wake of stumbles on the road. In particular, word spread about a SXSW show where France complained about his voice and challenged a heckler. Foxygen subsequently canceled European dates for May and June, citing "the creative health of the band," though the group's still headed for the Brighton Music Hall on May 7 and Wilco's Solid Sound Festival in North Adams on June 22.

"We just want it to be really good—and sometimes it's not," Rado says. "We need to slow down a little, really, rather than completely burn out and ruin what we had about our band that was special."

We Are the 21st Century Ambassadors of Peace & Magic certainly exudes something special, even though Rado and France wrote the album in just a week—and recorded it in another week at the Oregon studio of indie-pop producer Richard Swift. "In times where you're really excited about something, and inspired, most of your ideas are good," Rado says. "We always go in with a clear vision of what we want, but that vision is never really ever completed, because we get so distracted and go off on other little ideas. No album has come out the way we thought it would."

> "We just want it to be really good—and sometimes it's not. We need to slow down a little."

Consider that Rado and France recorded about a dozen "albums" in high school alone. "We were friends when we first started discovering music, so we liked the same things," says Rado, who met France in middle school in the Los Angeles suburb of Westlake Village, Calif. Inspired by Beck's Odelay and the Flaming Lips' The Soft Bulletin, the duo—self-taught beyond a few lessons on guitar, piano and trumpet—made overdub-heavy recordings given names such as Electric Sun Machine and Ghetto Plastik. "We obsessed over them, but at the same time, we totally banged them out," he says. "Call us prolific, but definitely for 15- or 16-year-olds, we were."

From the start, they enjoyed dabbling in multiple instruments but have developed most as songwriters. Rado says, "One of us will come to the table with an idea, a fragment of a song, and the other one will say 'I have this,' and we'll squish those things together."

The results directly evoke touchstones from the '60s and '70s that reflect the pair's tastes. "We don't shun newer music," Rado says, "but when I'm home listening to music, I'm listening to the older stuff. I like the way it sounds, the way it's recorded. I'm kind of an obsessive compulsive. I can't listen to a song if I don't like the way the ride cymbal or the snare drum sounds."

Foxygen's homemade 2011 gem Take the Kids Off Broadway embodied a garage-rock homage to the Electric Light Orchestra, while 21st Century Ambassadors scrambles echoes of the early Rolling Stones, Kinks and Velvet Underground, as well as funk and punk. "On Blue Mountain" soulfully summons a melody from Elvis' "Suspicious Minds," and the glockenspiel-laced "San Francisco" winks at both the like-titled ode to '60s flower power and "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

"We'll write something and then realize that it rips off something, and we'll go, 'OK, who cares,'" Rado says. "It's just something that we think is fun."

Now the duo's finding its balance onstage, augmented with a drummer, bassist and female backup singer/keyboardist, while France emerges as animated frontman. "We can't achieve what we can in the studio," Rado says. "Live is a little more radical—and louder." ×××

INFORMATION OVERLOAD

A small sample of what you don't get to read about

OCCASIONALLY, YOU might read an inane column somewhere and think to yourself, "Slow news day, huh?" Of course, that never happens in this magazine, and certainly not in this column, because every two weeks I carefully screen all possible topics and then pursue only the most fascinating one. As you know.

But what about the material that doesn't make the cut? What kind of important news am I withholding from you? What does the media not want you to know? Well, just this once, I'll tell you. And then we shall speak of it no more.

Since I'm on various media contact lists, I get thousands of e-mails every day pitching stories. OK, maybe it's thousands of e-mails a year. Or maybe I had some Thousand Island dressing at lunch. The point is, I get what seems like a lot of e-mails, relatively speaking. And I sift those e-mails, panning for column gold like a miner panning for, I don't know, gold.

One major genre of oft-skipped e-mails falls under a category I like to call "People who aren't sure whether 'Ezra' is a name for a man or a woman." Sometimes these PR professionals boldly take a 50-50 gamble and begin a pitch with something like, "Hey girl, wanna get your hair done?" thus tempting me to initiate a Bosom Buddies-style caper where I show up dressed as a woman and then everybody says, "Hey, wait a minute," when I let out a loud, manly burp while standing at a urinal.

But some e-mailers freely admit that they have no idea either way, as recently happened with a gentleman whose message began, "Dear Ezra, I hope you will be able to check out this event if you are in the L.A. area (and female)." The event in question was an erotic seminar for postmenopausal lesbians called "The Power of Pleasure." It covered topics such as "how to explore multi-orgasmic erogenous zones" and "how to expand sexual horizons with the latest sex toys and products." Great. Yet another fun thing I can't do because I'm not a lesbian age 50 or older.

On a lighter note, an organization that is no doubt highly credible asked me to consider an e-mail bearing the subject

"ObamaCare is rationing seniors to death." The first line declared, "The death panels we warned about in 2009 are up and running!" That's a serious accusation that gives me a great idea for a TV show where doctors sit in these chairs that spin around and then Nick Cannon explains that the death panel has voted, and one contestant will go on to Las Vegas while the other will pack up his things and die. You could call it So You Think You Can Live? or America's Got Death Panels, But Not Really.

Now that you know about that, let's move on to the Diet Dr Pepper Red Carpet Experience. The situation is that there are these country music awards, and they'll have a fake red carpet area where you can drink Dr Pepper and pretend you're Conway Twitty. So someone actually had to write this information in the form of a detailed press release and send it out to a national contact list. I had to read it and distill the salient points above. Ultimately it was copy edited, proofed, fact-checked and shipped to a printer for replication tens of thousands of times and subsequent distribution throughout the country. That's a lot of work, which is why my personal devotion to accuracy and correctness and journalistic rigor is brought to bear even if I'm just writing about this Red Pepper Carpet Doctor Diet, which frankly sounds disgusting.

I also get lots of e-mails about new bands, which is unfortunate since the last live show I attended was Poison, and the one before that was also Poison. So when I got an e-mail about a band called Compressorhead, "the world's heaviest metal band," I was understandably blasé—anything heavier than Poison is too heavy, and anything lighter isn't heavy enough. But in the spirit of at least temporarily keeping up with the incoming e-mail tide, I reluctantly clicked on a link. And thus discovered that Compressorhead is a German robot band.

I don't need to tell you how excited I was to learn about a four-armed robot drummer. Beyond the immediate gratification of watching videos of robots playing AC/DC, that particular message gave me hope that there might be more nuggets of gold washing about in the daily torrent of incoming information—that it's not all corporate job announcements, shrill alarmism and pimping for dubious products.

And then I deleted 1,700 unread messages. Hey, I've got robots to watch and Power of Pleasure seminars to sneak into. See you on the red pepper. ×××

"I do a joke about my grandmother dying alone on the floor, but there's context."

Soroff On JEN KIRKMAN

The comic and talk-show regular tells us about TV, drinking with Chelsea Handler and being a sexpert.

STAND-UP COMIC JEN KIRKMAN, 38, WAS BORN AND RAISED IN Needham and studied acting at Emerson College. She worked at the Boston Ballet and Broadway in Boston while honing her comedic chops at places like the Comedy Studio in Harvard Square. She lent her voice to the animated series Home Movies and wrote for the sitcom Perfect Couples, but she's best known from her role on HBO's Drunk History and as a regular guest on Chelsea Lately and After Lately. She released two comedy albums and was named one of the top rising comics by the Huffington Post. A resident of Los Angeles, she will be performing at Johnny D's in Somerville on April 26. Her book, I Can Barely Take Care of Myself: Tales From a Happy Life Without Kids, came out this month.

Jonathan Soroff: Would you change your mind about having kids if you could have Honey Boo Boo as your daughter?
Jen Kirkman: God, no. She is way too hyper for me. I think I'd reconsider being a mother if someone gave me a British gay teenage boy who was stylish and liked to go shopping. But Honey Boo Boo? Just her medical bills would be off the charts from early-onset diabetes.

Worst friend's kid's party you've been to?
It took place in a park, with the kids running around, screaming, and there was no alcohol.

Anything you'd never joke about?
Guns, violence, diseases. Death isn't usually funny. I do a joke about my grandmother dying alone on the floor, but there's context to that that does make it funny.

Is it harder for women to break into stand-up?
No. It's hard just to be funny, and the one thing is that nobody's funny when they first start out.

So how did your parents react when you told them about your career choice?
They did not like it, which is funny, because I studied acting at Emerson. Apparently that struck them as a viable career option. They seemed to think I'd be starring in musicals on Broadway upon graduation. But telling them I wanted to do stand-up was like telling them I wanted to become a junkie.

How do your parents feel about your choice not to have kids?
They don't care. They're in their 70s, my older sister's kids are grown up already, and I think my parents are tired and they're like, "Thank God. We don't have the energy."

Drink of choice?
I'm a white-wine girl. Pinot grigio.

Do you get drunk with Chelsea Handler?
We actually don't. Work is pretty intense. We've never sat down one-on-one and tied one on. She's not really a getting-wasted person, anyway. She's more like a broad who enjoys a few cocktails and holds it well. If she gets drunk, she just goes to bed.

Is she the world's biggest bitch?
She's blunt, but it's not bitchy. We had this thing at work called the Nope Board, and if you were wearing something ridiculous, she'd say, "Nope! Nope!" and she'd just pull the shoes or whatever off you and hang it on the board. But then you'd say, "But you wear sweatpants every day," and she'd be like, "I know." She also has this habit of replacing women's handbags with nicer ones. So she's sarcastic, but not mean. And super generous.

Is Craig Ferguson exaggerating the accent?
He's lovely, but I'm like, "Dude, you've been here for like 20 years. Why do you still talk like that?" When Americans go to Europe, they change their accent within six months. I think Madonna had a British accent the second they stamped her passport.

Favorite stand-up audience?
I think the East Coast is generally better than the West Coast because the West Coast is a little too laid-back and more politically correct. In San Francisco, you hear a lot of gasping, and I'm like, "Oh, come on!"

Why are so many comedians from Boston?
I'm super proud of that fact. The intelligence factor is higher, and the weather sucks.

Favorite TV show right now?
I like stupid TV. Millionaire Matchmaker is my favorite reality show. And obviously Chelsea Lately.

Patti Stanger is like the Dragon Lady of Fu Manchu!
I know, and for some reason, all the women this season seem to be female comics, and she's like, "Female comics can't find love because none of the men can deal with that." And she's right.

Thing you think is funny and no one else does?
I guess probably The Lawrence Welk Show. I TiVo it, and I watch it, and I get such joy from it. It makes me so happy.

Was Drunk History unfairly overlooked for an Emmy?
Well, we did win jury prize for best short film at Sundance. We were up against things like, "My daughter fought for her life in Afghanistan," and we won. It's coming to Comedy Central as a series this summer.

Worst joke you ever told?
The first joke I ever wrote, in 1997, and it was about Nancy Reagan's Just Say No campaign. So it was about 13 years too late, and I have no idea why I thought it was so funny.

Are you as much of a sexpert as Dr. Drew?
I think I'm way more knowledgeable than him. Maybe not when it comes to STDs and the medical stuff, but the actual sex? He's got nuthin' on me!

Wouldn't you like to punch him?
I know everybody kinda hates him, but I love him. I want to be on his radio show.

Did getting married at the Wayside Inn doom your marriage?
[Laughs] I think it was doomed already, but I do think the Wayside Inn has a lot of ghosts, and there's some bad mojo there.

Thing you miss most about Needham?
The fact that when I lived there, my parents did all my laundry and paid my bills. ×××

AN INDEPENDENT SPIRIT

CASEY AFFLECK'S ORIGINAL APPROACH TO MAKING MOVIES, AND TO LIFE

BY SEAN BURNS

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MINNIE SCHEDEEN

SHOT AT AMANDA DEMME STUDIO, ATWATER VILLAGE, CALIF.

HE LAUGHS A LOT.

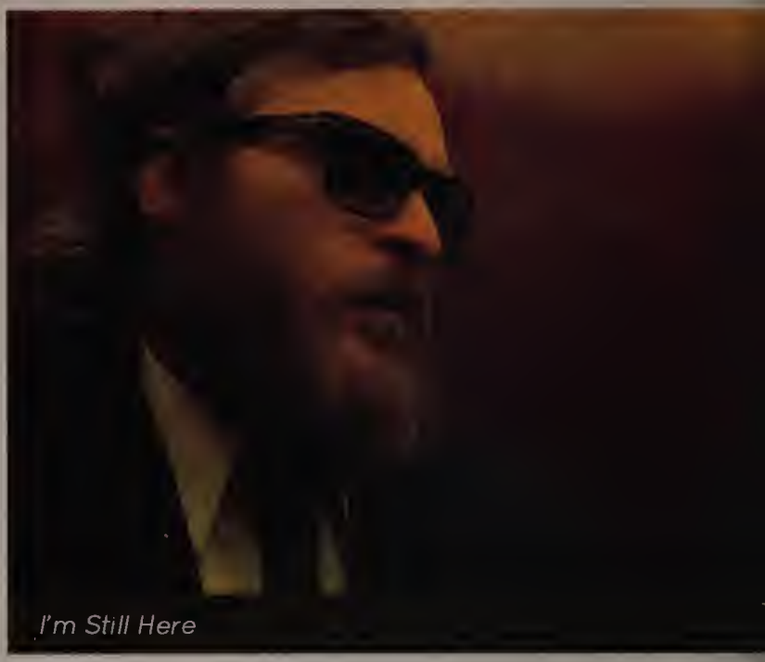
Big brother Ben seems to be the designated Movie Star in the family, working the Hollywood game like an old pro and cementing his status, whether at the Oscars or in the tabloids. Casey is the little sibling who went his own way. Ben and Matt used Good Will Hunting as a savvy career-launching pad into Michael Bay hunkdom and Jason Bourne iconography, while Casey (who stole that whole damn movie in the first place as Morgan, the sidekick who masturbated into baseball gloves and swallowed a bug) was busy hanging out with director Gus Van Sant, helping to edit Finding Forrester with a then-brand-new software program called Final Cut. "I was kind of kicking around, not working at the time, and thought, I can learn something new about the process, and this sounds like fun," he laughs, again.

"Sounds like fun" is how Affleck describes his new position as creative adviser for the Independent Film Festival Boston. All but shrugging off the unprecedented notion that an Oscar-nominated actor would return to his hometown for a week and hang out at the Somerville Theatre, Casey laughs once more. "I think they're trying to grow the festival a little bit. I said I would be honored to help. Sounds like fun. There are some ideas that really excited me, the idea of going into schools and working with kids. Schools that don't have money for a film program—it's so cheap to make movies these days, as long as you have some people who are willing to give their time, you can grab a couple of video cameras and a computer and teach moviemaking to anybody."

IFFBoston program director Adam Roffman confirms: "Casey Affleck consistently makes interesting choices, and his body of work lines up perfectly with the kind of independent spirit that we hope our festival conveys. As we enter our second decade, we believe Casey's experience, connections and insights will prove invaluable to the growth and vitality of our organization."

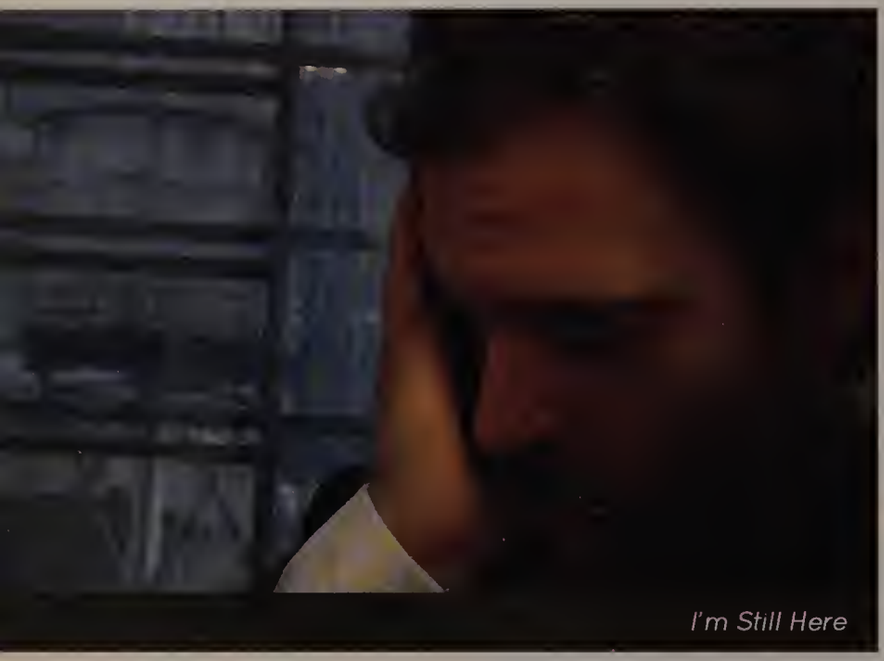
But none of this was ever part of Casey Affleck's master plan when he was growing up in Central Square and attending Cambridge Rindge and Latin. "I wasn't thinking ahead. I don't think I even knew what the Academy Awards were until I was out of high school. I wasn't paying any attention.

"I was trying to play baseball, and it was a big school. There were a lot of kids on the team and I was 5 feet tall, so I spent the season sitting on the bench. Then they asked me to come do the summer musical. I hadn't done anything like that. I tried out, and there were 19 girls and me at the tryouts. Surprise, surprise, I got the lead male role, being the only guy. But it turned out I was tone-deaf, so they literally had me onstage mouthing the words."



But Affleck soon was taking drama classes with local legend Gerry Speca. "I took Gerry's class, and he was one of those guys who you just hope and pray your kids get in one of their 12 years of education. He turned everybody on, not just to acting and theater, but to learning. This sounds corny, but he gave everybody a passion for being curious about life. I would definitely not be acting now were it not for him."

Shortly after graduating high school, Casey Affleck was cast in Gus Van Sant's To Die For as the hypotenuse in a murderous teenage triumvirate. On set he met his future wife, Summer Phoenix, and future partner in crime, Joaquin Phoenix. "At the time, I don't think I appreciated it," Affleck frankly admits. "As I got to know Gus, I slowly realized just how lucky I was, and that there were other people out there who were grinding it out at auditions and little parts for most of their life. Morgan Freeman didn't get a break until he was 50 years old. So I was pretty lucky."



Affleck's longtime partnership with Joaquin Phoenix took a turn for the weird with 2010's I'm Still Here. Casey's feature directorial debut was an unrepentantly abrasive mock-documentary about the psychological disintegration of a drug-addled actor named Joaquin Phoenix, conveniently played by an actor named Joaquin Phoenix, who had just publicly foresworn acting and tried to reinvent himself as a white hip-hop artist.

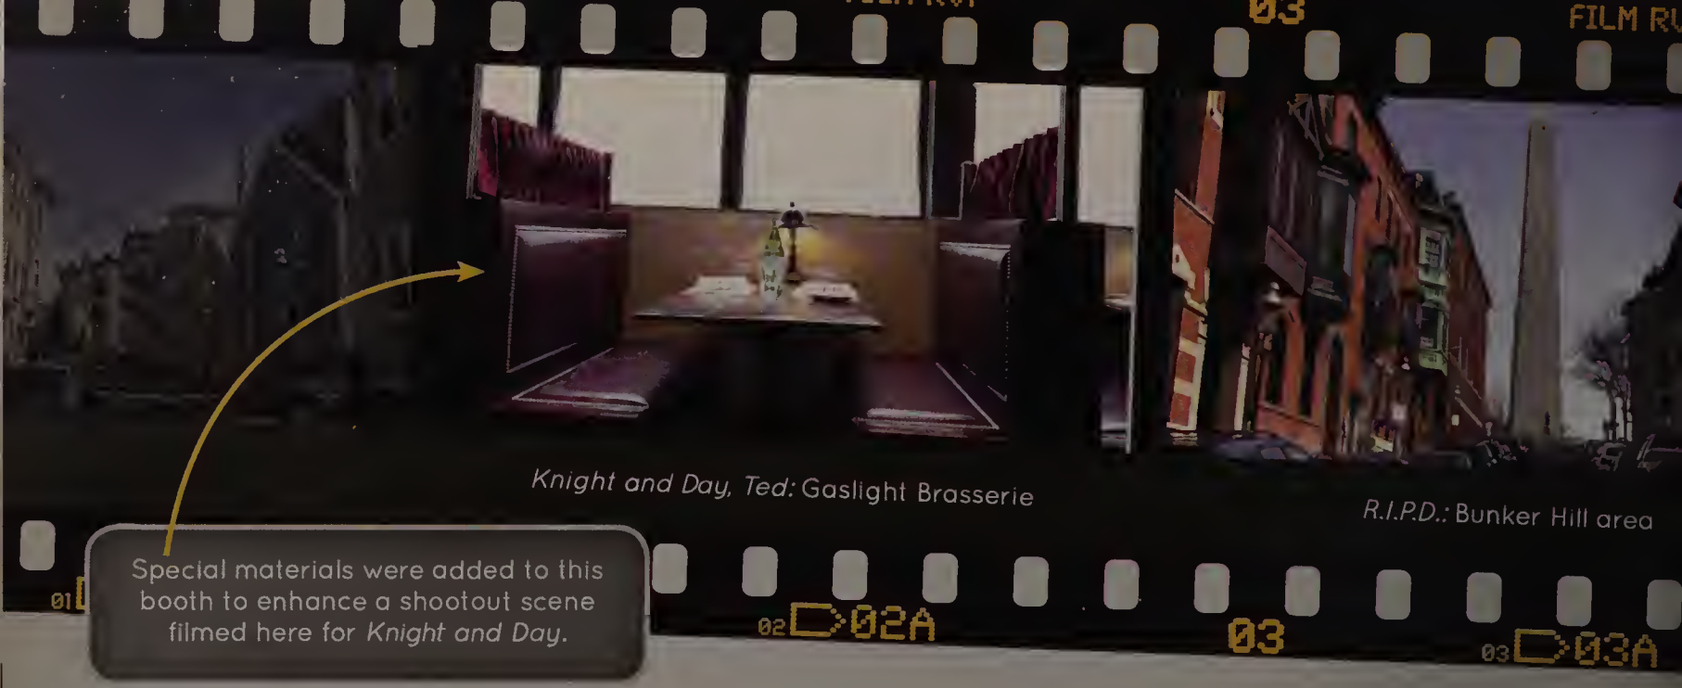
I laughed so hard at this movie that I almost made myself sick, but not everybody got the joke. My girlfriend at the time was furious at me for howling like a barnyard animal during a late-run screening at the Kendall Square Cinema, where only four patrons had showed up in the first place, and just two remained after the lights came up.

This particular story sent Affleck into hysterics. "That's hilarious, man. There were four tickets sold? And only two walked out? That was probably our biggest audience.

"This experience was a gigantic wake-up call for me. I thought it was very clear that this was an over-the-top satire on actors and celebrities, and it was supposed to be self-deprecating, making fun of the film business and celebrity culture. I thought it was very clear that it was all fiction, and the reason that we didn't say that it was fiction while we were making it, and tried to pass it off as a 'documentary,' was just because we didn't have any money. We would never be able to get a thousand extras in a concert hall for our movie. We couldn't afford to pay David Letterman. So we had to pretend that it was all real and get the things we needed. Joaquin could just go book a show, and I would tape it.

"But I never thought that when people saw the movie they wouldn't understand that. Joaquin and I would watch the screenings and laugh—we thought it was a broad comedy. Other people took it for something completely different, and that was a big surprise. It's about this very abusive character, and I think people just felt abused at the end. They felt yelled at and made fun of, and people around the movie had a hard time separating the fiction and the character in the movie from reality. So it all got mixed up, and in some ways that was the film's greatest achievement. It did seem like reality. But on the other hand, it backfired because a lot of people got upset and they thought what was happening in front of them was real, and it wasn't. Oh well, at least you two people who stayed in the theater got it. You might be the only ones."

Affleck does have a history with IFFBoston. I have seen many grisly films at the festival over this past decade or so, but the only time a volunteer ever offered a pre-screening warning to the audience was in 2010 for The Killer Inside Me. Michael Winterbottom's arid, humorless adaptation of the Jim Thompson novel stars Affleck as Texas sheriff Lou Ford, who routinely pummels women to death with a savagery seldom seen onscreen. Mass walkouts ensued.



"WE WOULD NEVER BE ABLE TO GET A THOUSAND EXTRAS IN A CONCERT HALL FOR OUR MOVIE."

Affleck explains: "One of the very first things Michael Winterbottom said when we first met was that he wanted the movie to have very realistic violence. I thought about it, and I agreed that was the best way to make this film. Because if you have a movie about a guy who beats and kills people, and you do it in a way that is not disturbing to the audience, then it contributes to what I think is a desensitization in our culture. Which is what most movies do. You have a movie like Transformers where hundreds of people are mowed down and killed, and there's no consequence and you don't feel for them. That's the kind of thing that allows people to have a disconnect between actions and the real human consequences of violence.

"I would rather do a movie where violence is upsetting because it is upsetting. It is disturbing. If you see it in person, and a few times I have, it's sickening. That's the way it should be portrayed. So I was on board for what Michael wanted to do, and I stand by it. I would rather have people watch that movie, be sickened and leave than have people just eat their popcorn."

That's Casey Affleck for you. Stubborn, iconoclastic and a true original, making up his own rules as he goes along. ***

My Cup of Tea

STEEPED IN TRADITION

FOR CYNTHIA GOLD, resident tea sommelier at L'Espalier, a fine cup of aromatic tea often beats a glass of wine—and holds no threat of a hangover. Gold, who has developed unique tea blends for the French restaurant, puts on a classic tea service of five spring-inspired selections on April 28 during a special Sunday Tea Tasting. A curated array of tea sandwiches, pastries and petit fours will complement an assortment of early-harvest teas from China, India and Japan. L'Espalier will also offer an exclusive dish cooked with the exotic leaves to give guests a different perspective on how to take their tea. Stop by for a sip of spring.

Trial and Error

Chains of Command

Thoughtlessness is the root of all evil—at least according to the subject of director Margarethe von Trotta's latest portrait of a lady. Hannah Arendt tracks the German-American Jewish political theorist, who escaped from Nazi Germany in the 1930s, as she heads to Jerusalem to report for The New Yorker. More than a decade after Nuremberg, Adolf Eichmann is captured and put on trial for his role in transporting Jews to Nazi concentration camps. Weaving real footage into the narrative, this biopic shows how his testimony led Arendt to her controversial "banality of evil" theory, which maintains that ordinary individuals who lack critical thought can commit the most atrocious crimes. Think for yourself at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on April 28. Sarah Hagman

Reviews by Sean Burns

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Company You Keep ★★ ½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former member of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Disconnect ★ One of those deadly serious "everybody is connected" parables that were all the rage about 10 years ago, this magnificently misguided effort tells three interlocking stories of lives ruined by Wi-Fi. Pitched somewhere near the somber worst-case scenarios of a driver's education training film, it's Reefer Madness with smartphones. The title is more of a command: Unplug your modem or certain doom lies in wait. Early on, it becomes impossible not to imagine screenwriter Andrew Stern as Grandpa

Simpson, waving his cane and telling all you kids to get your damn Twitter off his lawn. Lord knows, online bullying and child exploitation are serious problems, and obviously our era of connectivity has left us vulnerable to cybercrimes. But the film's incessant alarmist tone is laughably unconvincing. For most sane, well-adjusted folks, using the Internet is just a fact of life, not a cause for garment-rending hysteria. Millions of people meet and communicate online every day; it's really not the end of the world, dude. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

G.I. Joe: Retaliation ★★ It's a few cuts above 2009's unwatchable G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra, and maybe the best movie anybody could make based on a cartoon that only existed to push Hasbro toys back in the 1980s. I'm not sure if that's damning with faint praise or just exhausted resignation. Dwayne Johnson gives another one of his endearing, overly sincere performances as the leader of an elite military squad suddenly under attack when a shape-shifting supervillain passes himself off as the president (Jonathan Pryce) and starts dropping bombs. There's also some stuff about ninjas. Dancer-turned-director Jon M. Chu, of Step Up sequel fame, at least keeps the tone agreeably stupid and the action easy to follow. Pryce hams it up with riffs on birther paranoia, but the most unintentionally amusing flourish is Bruce Willis' glorified cameo as a retired general turned survivalist gun nut. To call Willis' performance phoned-in would imply that he could be bothered to dial a phone. He looks disgusted that this movie even exists, and he's not alone. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gimme the Loot ★★★★ The most purely enjoyable movie I have seen since I can't remember when, writer/director Adam Leon's vibrant, rambunctious debut feature is so alive and full of mischief that most other films can't help but feel anemic in comparison. Ty Hickson and Tashiana Washington star as two small-time teenage graffiti artists from the Bronx, hoping to make a name for themselves by tagging the home-run apple at the Mets' Citi Field. What comes after are two days of dizzy comic misadventures in petty crime, with an oddball rogues' gallery of classic NYC eccentrics taking turns stealing the show. Leon's New York is a gritty wonderland where anything can happen, and Gimme the Loot has a lot to say about race and class without making a big deal out of saying anything at all. Done wrong with a barely promoted one-week run at the Kendall Square Cinema, this little gem is thankfully available via your local cable provider's IFC On Demand. Find it, and you can thank me later. (On Video On Demand.)

Ginger & Rosa ★★★ ½ As the Cuban missile crisis raged on, across the pond we've got an apocalypse of another kind in this autobiographical remembrance from writer/director Sally Potter. I'm afraid it's been lost in the shuffle of bigger, showier releases, but this is a fabulous film, vividly realized and anchored by a brilliant performance from young Elle Fanning, rendering the usual teen angst and disillusionment as something both deeply felt and oddly mysterious. Ginger's long road of disappointment is exacerbated by her friendship with the troubled Rosa, played here by Alice Englert, a steely screen presence who had little to do in the recent witchcraft swill Beautiful Creatures. The only spell she casts here is on Ginger's dad, whom Alessandro Nivola depicts with an awfully annoying air of self-serving moral superiority while making one bad decision after another. It wouldn't work without Fanning, who is so tough, transparent and aching. In one close-up after another, there exists a rollercoaster of emotions. Ginger's never as old or as wise as she thinks she is, but she's getting there. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (In the suburbs.)

Lore ★★★ ½ I guess I never stopped to wonder what happened to all those cuties in the Hitler

Youth after their parents lost the war. This tough-minded, visceral picture from Australian director Cate Shortland tracks a gaggle of stern Aryan kids abandoned after their S.S. officer parents are taken away by the Allies. We see all this through the eyes of the eldest, Hannalore, played with a sharp edge by Saskia Rosendahl. She's left in charge of leading her siblings—including a newborn baby—through the Black Forest to their grandmother's house, and the only help comes from a dashing young Jewish lad, which naturally pits Hannalore's burgeoning sexuality against her deeply ingrained bigotry. Germany immediately after the fall is a deadly maze of looting, violence and desperation, shot in tight, low-angle close-ups to approximate the characters' point of view. Lore is a tough, survivalist fable that stays with you. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

No ★★★ ½ Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer a TV-ad campaign for a referendum vote that just might kick Chile's brutal dictator Augusto Pinochet out of office. While idealists in the various political parties think the airtime should be used to expose Pinochet's atrocities, Bernal's boy wonder sells democracy as a product like any other—with rainbows, jingles, silly comedy sketches and even a mime. No's most cutting gag is just how much these political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good because the people casting votes are generally stupid. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Olympus Has Fallen ★ ½ The second worst Die Hard movie of the year finds Gerard Butler playing a disgraced Secret Service agent who becomes our country's last hope after some nasty North Korean terrorists blow up most of Washington D.C. and hold the president (Aaron Eckhart) hostage in the White House bunker. A deliberate throwback to junky mid-'90s thrillers such as Air Force One and Executive Decision, Olympus Has Fallen severely misjudges the cheese-to-violence ratio, with Training Day director Antoine Fuqua lavishing his attention on innocents shredded by machine gun fire, cold-blooded executions and women being brutalized. It's hard to surrender to such a preposterous, cornball potboiler when your face is constantly rubbed in human suffering. Somebody also apparently miscalculated the budget, as this is the cheapest-looking movie in theaters right now. Bargain-basement CGI effects induce unintentional laughter, while the second half of the film is Gerard Butler skulking through under-lit hallways. There are a lot of solemn patriotic platitudes, and Butler sticks his knife in people's skulls. Isn't crap like this supposed to be fun? (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper co-stars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Joe Anderson

Red Hot Dollars

In Simon Killer, a recently lovesick man finds comfort with a Parisian prostitute.

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (In the suburbs.)

Simon Killer ★★★ Breakups are a bitch. Just ask Simon (Brady Corbet), who, in his heartbroken shellshock, wanders the streets of Paris, composing long e-mails to a lost love who is clearly much better off without him. An exercise in constricted vision, Antonio Campos' follow-up to his icky 2008 debut Afterschool is a mood piece pulled off with such formal vigor you can almost forgive how familiar it is. Simon finds himself in a sex club, falling almost instantly for a prostitute named Victoria (Mati Diop). It's cute the way he believes her well-rehearsed lines, and a bungled attempt at intimacy soon grows into something more codependent and unsettling. The jarring strobe-light scene transitions hint that disaster is on the horizon, but then again so does the title. Corbet co-wrote the film with Campos and Diop, and it feels at times like a few of the talented kids saw Taxi Driver too many times. It's the kind of promising film we'll look back on fondly when everybody involved has moved on to bigger and better things. (At Kendall Square.)

Spring Breakers ★★★★ The latest outrageous provocation from Trash Humpers auteur Harmony Korine is sort of like what might happen if Jean-Luc Godard directed a Girls Gone Wild video. A toxic barrage of flesh, drugs and oceans of beer, the relatively plotless polemic finds three morally bankrupt college girls (Ashley Benson, Vanessa Hudgens and Rachel Korine) dragging their goody-goody best friend (Selena Gomez, who plays a gal so religious she's actually named Faith) on a mind-numbingly lurid spring-break bacchanal. They're bailed out of a jam by James Franco's white rapper Alien—the kind of instantly iconic character every dude in a dorm room is going to be for Halloween this year. Barely recognizable under the cornrows, oversized shades and grills on his teeth, Franco brings a contagious self-delight to his empty-headed machine-gun posture. Fetishizing the bikini-clad decadence with sumptuous cinematography, Korine wallows in the junk culture he's excoriating. In other words, the movie has its cake and then eats more cake. Breathtakingly edited in hypnotic patterns of repetition, Spring Breakers is some kind of sicko masterpiece. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Trance ★ ½ This film is just more short-attention-span theater from director Danny Boyle, who, as usual, spends so much energy spinning the camera and whirling around to techno music there's no time to notice the story he's telling is bunk. Egregiously stupid, even by the standard of trashy heist thrillers, Trance stars James McAvoy as a smarmy auction house employee who lifts a $25 million Goya painting and then bonks his head and forgets where he left it. That's right, amnesia. He's in deep with a gang of shady crooks led by Vincent Cassel, who of course decides that all the young lad needs is some hypnotherapy. Enter Rosario Dawson, va-va-vooming it up as one of the least credible mental health professionals we've seen onscreen in a while. She hypnotizes him (let's face it, Rosario Dawson hypnotizes everybody), and the screenplay begins to contort itself into one asinine, outlandish development after another. By the time pubic hair grooming becomes an actual key plot point, you'll wonder if all involved have also suffered head injuries. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Aurora Bareilles

Whatever you do, don't ask Sara Bareilles for a love song. The singer/songwriter/pianist landed in the top spot on the Billboard Pop 100 chart with her 2007 hit and its bouncy "I'm not gonna write you a love song" chorus. She's since racked up three Grammy nominations with her keyboard skills and songbird vocals, and she's been hard at work on her fourth studio album, from which the first single, "Brave," just dropped. Get a taste of the new material April 28 at the Tsai Performance Center on Boston University's campus. Richard Stile

Blast From the Typecast Past

Walking through a Wendy Chidester exhibit is like entering an antique store of gadgetry, without the dust and clutter. Inspired by discarded typewriters, rusted oilcans, worn leather suitcases and other forgotten items, the Utah-based artist enlivens the sentimentality with vibrant pop-art colors, using oil paints on large canvases to bolster the vintage feel. Chidester uses multiple glazing applications to add dimension to otherwise realistic renderings of the jettisoned junk. Leave behind the high-tech world and take a stroll down memory lane in Relics at the Arden Gallery through April 29.

Graphic Grub

Somewhere between Julia Child and Charles M. Schulz, Lucy Knisley found a place to flourish. A food comic for Saveur magazine and author of the Paris travelogue French Milk, Knisley illustrates moments of her foodie life, from childhood chow to mature meals, in her latest graphic memoir, Relish: My Life in the Kitchen. Traveling to Mexico, Italy and even McDonald's, this connoisseur presents stories of her obsession with everything from fresh fromage to French fries, and ends each chapter with a related family recipe. Step into the kitchen with Knisley on April 28 at the Brookline Booksmith.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeondlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

BRAVE ART

Nit-Picker Not Included

Art in all its forms was front and center when Company One hosted its gala at the Artists For Humanity Epicenter.

Drama was a given (seeing as Company One stages some of the most interesting theater in Boston), and the culinary arts were represented by a buffet worth the time required at the gym to work it all off, as well as craft cocktails courtesy of Bully Boy Distillers. The dance performances ranged from b-boy to tap, while the music was courtesy of DJ Sham. And there were two painters—Percy 14E Wright, working in spray paint, and Daniel Callahan, doing tribal-style face painting based upon what the person being painted told him about what was happening in his or her life.

Then there was the artistry involved in assembling such a highly eclectic crowd, which included gorgeous multi-hyphenate Miranda Craigwell, honorees Lydia Diamond, Danny Bryck, and Laurette and Bob Bachman, banking bigwig Ron Walker and his delectable other half, Shawnda, the beyond stunning April Soderstrom, skatepunk artist Dillon Buss, sneaker curator Rick Kosow, one guest who said, "My assistant has an assistant," and someone else who said, apropos of pretty much nothing, "It rained dildos for seven days and seven nights."

Meanwhile, the art form of comedy was represented, whether intentionally or not, in the silent auction, where one of the "prizes" was an "Organic Family Lice Treatment."

Out of the Mouths of Babes

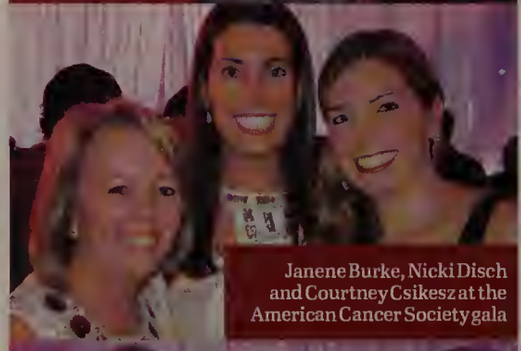
In the art world, there are lots of famous twins, such as New York darlings Mike and Doug Starn, the Brazilian graffiti duo Os Gêmeos, and Japanese manga artists Masashi and Seishi Kishimoto.

In Boston, there are the twin arts patrons Paul and Wes Karger, the lead sponsors of MassArt's annual auction, who throw an epic dinner party at Stella in the South End after the Preview Gala.

Among the dazzling crew on hand were painter Caleb Neelon, pint-sized pistol Chrissy Kazis Sayare, the dangerous duo of Mark Andrus and Matt Greer, bride-to-be Amy Belkin and her adoring fiancé, Jay Mofenson, impish attorney Josh Zakim, smokin' hot doctor Jenny Fitzsimmons, Lauren Hutton lookalike Nicole Conlon and ever affable restaurateur Mike, the unsinkable Rona Goodman, the ubiquitous Ben and Tonya Mezrich, and others of their über-groovy ilk.

Dancers at Company One's gala

Miranda Craigwell and Shawn LaCount at the Company One gala



Justin Reis, April Soderstrom and Mark Schwindenhammer at the Company One gala

Chrissy Kazis Sayare and Matt Greer at the MassArt party

Lily Davis and Paula Bernstein at the American Cancer Society gala

Janene Burke, Nicki Disch and Courtney Csikesz at the American Cancer Society gala

Dr. Susan DeCoste and Dianne Reilly at the American Cancer Society gala

Cheeks were kissed, glasses were drained, bellies were filled, and by the end of the evening, one guest was groaning, "I have to be at work early tomorrow morning," to which his fiancé responded, "I didn't know you worked. I thought you were a banker."

> "I'd never heard of Hingham being called Cha-Chingham."

If the Nickname Fits

If you're going with a royalty theme, there's no better setting than the Park Plaza Castle, where the American Cancer Society hosted its annual Key Gala: Hope Reigns.

The evening began with cocktails, where the mixing and mingling included the likes of Matt Siegel wannabe Greg Hill of WAAF, loudmouthed lawyer Ken Martin, co-chair Dianne Reilly, statuesque MD Susan DeCoste, committee members Janene and Bill Burke, the aptly named Nicki Disch, adorable volunteers Lily Davis, Paula Bernstein and Taylor Parrish (manning the killer Alex and Ani raffle), a whole passel of Driscolls —Alana, Caitlin, Christine, Dan, Meghan, Nick, Ryan, Jay and Kevin—the stunning Courtney Csikesz, and one woman who asked a passing waiter, "Can I give you this glass?" to which he responded, "Of course! I've always wanted one just like it!"

The evening's only sour note: One of the bars ran out of Chardonnay, resulting in a few borderline meltdowns. But the evening's most edifying moment came when one person said, "I've heard people refer to Duxbury as Deluxebury, but before today, I'd never heard of Hingham being called Cha-Chingham." ×××

Familiar Pleasures

My childhood memories of the Cape are an idyll of fried clams and watercolor sky. I remember the penny candy shops with their ossified clumps of saltwater taffy, their root beer and tutti-frutti sticks that you could suck to a point, like a shiv. I remember the dull resignation of the grown-ups as they inflicted their nightly pogrom on the lobsters, and how the cruel parts of the beach ran in striations, so you could never make it from your blanket to the water without lancing your instep on a piece of jagged crab. I wondered, too, why all those men in Speedos were kissing. At the time, I was only dimly cognizant, at best, of tidal dynamics and of Bear Week, and everything past the Sagamore Bridge seemed like a cloud cuckoo land of marine mammals, putt-putt greens and horizon.

That exoticism melted years later, at about 6:20 pm in the checkout line at the Star Market in Hyannis. The couple in front of me wore blurry tattoos and a marinade of Pall Malls, and they argued—citing exact anatomical details—about the disenchantments in their affaire de coeur. I might as well have never left the Orange Line. Later, as I clanged through my future in-laws' kitchenware for a pan big enough to brown a pot roast, I felt the grounded comfort of domestic chores. The contentment of the familiar.

When the familiar includes the beaches of Centerville Harbor and the ice cream at Four Seas (see page 14), you've got it pretty good. Thank God we live in Massachusetts.

CREAM OF THE CROP »

BEN AND JERRY HAVE nothing on Doug Warren, master of frozen delights at Four Seas ice cream shop in Centerville. The Cape Cod native stepped up nearly a decade ago to take over the family business from his parents, who had been churning out legen-dairy frozen treats since buying the shop in 1960.

The shop's claim to Cape fame is its homemade, 16-percent butterfat ice cream (the highest you'll find in a store brand is 14 percent). Its rotating menu includes more than 30 rich flavors, few of which have changed since Warren's parents ran the business, rendering the little shop an iconic Cape establishment. "My dad wanted this to be an old-fashioned ice cream place and have ginger and frozen pudding and rum and butter," Warren says, "just really simple flavors."

For a few weeks each summer, Warren takes advantage of fresh, local produce in his strawberry and peach ice creams. "It's amazing having strawberries picked one day and then literally put into the ice cream the next," he says of his longtime favorite flavor. To top it all off, Four Seas leaves the stale, flavorless jimmies to ice cream chains, instead offering choices such as homemade claret wine sauce and walnuts candied in maple syrup.

Warren helps feed minds as well, hiring students from teacher recommendations and setting each up with a scholarship fund as they work. These seasonal employees are often second- or third-generation workers, wielding the ice cream scoop in the same vein as their parents and grandparents before them. Good to know they're keeping it all in the family.

Chicken Out

They're calling it KFC, but the familiar acronym undersells the fried chicken dinner that chef Robert Grant and the folks at Kendall Square's Belly Wine Bar have put together this summer. If you can rally three to seven of your closest friends, the charcuterie-focused kitchen will feed you a bucket of craggy, deeply seasoned chicken pieces and inspired fixin's: bitter and fresh fennel-radicchio slaw and gorgeously tender butter-laden biscuits that are extraordinary with or without a drizzle of honey (Sweet Cheeks and Island Creek Oyster Bar, this is your competition). And lest you forget you're in an Italian wine bar, there's an optional flight of orange wines—the sophisticate's Orange Crush.

CLOVER SPROUTS ANEW

FROM TRUCK TO TAKE-OUT: Clover's latest project is a small-scale venue in Brookline Village, set to open by mid-May, on Harvard Street near Matt Murphy's and Orinoco. In addition to sandwiches, the store will feature Clover's new bottled barbecue sauce, pimento cheese spread, and "lots of take-away stuff," according to Lucia Jazayeri, director of communications for Clover. You won't be able to get too comfortable ("There might be a little bench in there, but no actual seating," Jazayeri says), but if you're a CSA devotee, you can pick up your weekly produce there, just as you can at the Harvard Square, Inman Square and Burlington locations. Find details and sign up on the Clover website.

Meanwhile, the Clover folks are developing a half-dozen winning sandwiches from a recent contest among their MIT clientele. Actually, there was only supposed to be one winner, but none of the Clover judges could resist any of the six finalists, which include, says Jazayeri, an "awesome" beet and horseradish mayo sandwich likely to roll out in October. So everybody wins: very Cambridge, and very Clover.

23 TURNS 30 As Grill 23 & Bar marks its 30th anniversary, it's high time we recognize Jay Murray—executive chef since 1998 and a recovering vegetarian—as ranking right up there with the city's first-name-basis chefs. In fact, since its inception Grill 23 has been a chef-driven restaurant, a rarity among full-fledged steakhouses, long before Boston Chops or KO Prime opened. When the restaurant kicked off its yearlong celebration with a festive, beef-centric dinner, one course was pierogi stuffed with beef sweetbreads and cheek confit, followed by a dish of brisket with sunchokes, carrots and turnip. That's not only delicious, but sustainable, says Eric Brandt of Brandt Beef: "This helps me sell the whole animal." The celebration continues with a major renovation of Grill 23's bar during the summer.

WICKET GOOD

Maybe it has something to do with our revolutionary spirit, but America has never really taken to cricket. The game, which originated in England and by some accounts dates back to the 16th century, has a huge following around the world—just not here. But with the introduction of Hit Wicket, a new sports bar and restaurant set to open in Inman Square before Memorial Day, cricket audiences throughout greater Boston finally have a bar to claim. "There's no place to go and really hang out and watch cricket as a sport," says owner Shubha Ramesh Kumar, an India native who moved here in 2003 with her husband. "Cricket—any sport for that matter—is something that you take with you where you go. You're not going to stop watching it if you move to a different country."

Taking over the former Spice & Rice space on Cambridge Street, the restaurant seats 95 and boasts three TVs in the bar with five more in the dining area, one of which has an 80-inch screen. Like any sports bar, there will always be a match showing, whether it be cricket, soccer, baseball or something else. "We thought it would be a good platform to expose Americans to cricket," Kumar says.

As both a devout sports fan (she loves the Red Sox and Celtics) and a strict vegetarian, Kumar notes that she's often frustrated at the lack of plant-based options at casual eateries. As a result, the street-food-influenced menu at Hit Wicket features significant vegetarian and vegan options from such cricket-playing locales as Australia, New Zealand, Sri Lanka, South Africa, India, Pakistan, England, Bangladesh and the West Indies. She's brought in Stacy Blount, who's transitioning from running his own catering business, to help develop the meat dishes and helm the kitchen.

There are spins on typical bar food—such as the masala peanuts, roasted and topped with red onions, cilantro, green chili and chaat masala, or the chicken wings, with a choice of buffalo, grilled Jamaican jerk, or spicy lentil powder flavors—as well as options that may be new to Bostonians. The South African bunny chow, for instance, is a bread bowl filled with either garbanzo, chicken or lamb masala, topped with chopped cilantro and served with pickled peppers and red onion, lime wedges and dried lentil chips.

Kumar hopes that in addition to introducing new vegetarian-friendly flavors to the area, she'll be able to turn a few sports lovers on to her favorite game. "I know how big baseball is in Boston," she says, "but I want to see if they can fall in love with cricket."

Q&A

BO AND TELL

Hamilton native and comedian Bo Burnham performs at the Berklee Performance Center on May 16. All proceeds benefit the One Fund.

You got your start on YouTube. Do you have a lot in common with other Internet celebrities?

I don't. I haven't posted anything online in a few years. A lot of Internet celebrities nowadays, all they do is just talk to their fans and blog about their life. You know, "Send your fan mail to this P.O. Box." They're just in everyone's face, and they're posting videos every single day, and on multiple accounts. I only had 12 videos the three years I was on there. And it was only to perform the songs that I had written in one take. The whole mentality of it is a little crazy to me sometimes. It's like a little psychotic, like the webcam two feet away from your face, just smiling, looking right at the camera and making eye contact with 6 million people on the other side.

Any tips for those who want to go viral?

I'd feel disingenuous. I'd feel like it's like people giving tips on how to win the lottery or something. It's random. And it can have very good or very bad outcomes. It's a little bit like running around a field with a golf club, hoping you get struck by lightning.

You have a musical comedy approach. What comes first—the music or the lyrics?

It can come either way. It just depends upon the particular thing that I'm doing.... Usually you write the lyrics and you realize what the song's going to be about, and you think, "OK, a song that's about this. How should that sound?"

Least funny part about being a comedian?

Just probably the loneliness of it. When you're on the road, you're alone in a Ramada Inn in North Dakota. That's when your job doesn't feel too funny. Of course, there's funniness in that.

What are some things that you find funny about Boston?

I think the accent is hilarious. I don't think I have it too bad, but my father has it pretty terrible. And the sounds people make are just really funny. I'll probably slip back into it when I go there. Just the sound—the phonetic language of Boston—is very funny.

Drink of the Moment

VIN DE SIÈCLE

NAME: Wine

INVENTOR: Dionysus, Bacchus, or some forgotten Neolithic boozehound with a bunch of grapes and a clay pot.

WHERE: The Nantucket Wine Festival, arguably New England's most refined confluence of cabernet and cookery, returns from May 15 to 19. Combine the talents of 40 visiting chefs with the fruits of 150 world-class wineries, and you've got a crash course in oenophilism, to say nothing of seafood pairings.

WHAT TO DRINK: Veuve Clicquot La Grande Dame 2004. Poured by winemaker Pierre Casenave on Friday, May 17, at Galley Beach restaurant, this is a blend of eight traditional crus. Named after the original Mrs. Clicquot, it's described as exceptionally crisp with "aromas of vanilla, apricot and jasmine." Basically, it's jeweled silk in a fluted glass.

WHAT ELSE TO DRINK: Château Margaux. This extremely prestigious winery is making its first official appearance at the festival this year, with a seminar hosted by the estate's managing director, Paul Pontallier. He'll be guiding tipplers through the Pavillon Blanc and Rouge offerings up to the exclusive Grand Vin.

OR GO AMERICAN: Returning rock-star wineries include Stag's Leap, Cliff Lede, Penner-Ash and Donelan.

AN EDUCATED PALATE: Seminars abound. One that stands out is "You Say Shiraz, I Say Syrah: Demystifying the Rhone Varietal Craze," if you can't tell your carignan from your cinsaut.

PAIR IT WITH: Considering the whole island becomes a gastronomic playground (think Candy Land, but instead of Gum Drop Mountain you get the Garden of Sous Vide Duck Breasts and Burrata Bog), you can hardly throw a Duxbury oyster shell without hitting a household name like Barbara Lynch or Lydia Shire. Also on hand will be local celebs such as Robert Sisca from Bistro du Midi, William Kovel from Catalyst and Brooke Vosika from the Bristol Lounge. Highlights include winery dinners at American Seasons and Topper's, but don't miss Friday's Winemakers Tasting at the Chef's Table at the White Elephant's Brandt Point Grill, featuring heavy-hitters from Napa.

AS A DIGESTIF: Nantucket's standout restaurant, American Seasons, is hosting an American aged whiskey tasting on Sunday, May 19. The wine-weary can end the weekend with sips of craft booze from some of the country's most obsessive distillers.

It's almost rosa rugosa season, which means Linda Lee Alley will soon be foraging along the dunes at Gay Head and State beaches for the shocking-pink petals. Having learned from her mother and grandmother how to make preserves and pickles, this lifelong Vineyard native uses the flowers in her Exquisite Rose Petal Jelly, one of the most unique—and in-demand—flavors she sells under the label New Lane Sundries. Also be on the lookout for tangy beach plum, wild grape and autumn olive (actually a wine-colored berry that's loaded with lycopene), all of which appear on Wednesdays and Saturdays later in the season at the West Tisbury Farmers Market. And don't forget to grab a jar of her signature zinfandel chili jam, a condiment that will jump-start any cheese plate.

HAIRY SITUATION

As booty-baring shorts replace ankle-length jackets, we're looking to shed our furry winter coats. When the oh-so-painful wax and unsightly razor burn are too much to swallow, those as-seen-on-TV-esque products look all the more alluring. Here we test two fan favorites to see if they live up to the hype.

Finishing Touch Personal Hair Remover

Ouch factor: Zilch
Results: Smooth-ish
Best for: Sensitive spots, such as underarms and bikini lines

With a sleek design small enough to fit in your purse or pocket (you know, in case you need to get your groom on at the office), the Finishing Touch trims at three lengths and touts painless hair removal with less regrowth. While it closely cuts thinner, lighter hair, anything that puts up more of a fight is left looking like a buzz cut. On the positive side, this bad boy can go just about anywhere—even where the sun don't shine.

Hair Off Facial Buffer

Ouch factor: Builds to a burn
Results: Still spiky
Best for: Taming the lady 'stache

The Hair Off's thumb-sized design is meant to buff away peach fuzz from your upper lip to your cheekbone. Really, though, it rubs you raw with even the gentlest stroke, leaving your face untouchable, red and slightly burning. Think sandpaper (or sex on the beach, for you adventurous types). Though it's marketed as a two-in-one hair removal and exfoliation product, you'd be better off shaving and exfoliating separately. And leaving this product well alone.

More Than Meets the Spectacles

» Warby Parker «
83 Newbury St., Boston
(888-492-7297) warbyparker.com

At the forefront of the one-for-one movement, eyewear line Warby Parker brings Kerouac-cool to spectacles while doing good for those in need. Founded by grad school chums Neil Blumenthal, Jeffrey Raider, Andrew Hunt and David Gilboa, Warby Parker is the result of the On the Road–lovin' dudes' mutual frustration in the quest for the perfect pair of specs. The unusual name pays homage to the famed Beat author, combining the names of two characters discovered in Jack Kerouac's early journals. "There's a spirit of rebellion and a commitment to innovation in Kerouac's writing, and the ethos of the Beat Generation is similar to Warby Parker's," Blumenthal says. "We're always looking forward." Right now, that means their sights—both far and near—are set on Boston.

With a flagship store in New York City, Warby Parker is set to open shop in the Hub on May 17. Blumenthal notes that aside from personal ties to Boston—he met his wife while attending Tufts, and Raider is from Wellesley—this is a logical location for the brand's second retail store. "Massachusetts style is Yankee to the bone," he says. "A monocle pairs as well with a blue blazer as it does with a pair of mud-caked duck boots."

Oh yeah, in addition to the stylish range of traditional glasses (including the Ainsworth frames seen here), there's the Warby Parker monocle line. But these aren't for the Monopoly man. Inspired by Hunt's grandfather's monocle and aptly named the Colonel, the piece is a favorite of New York City's Eleven Madison Park restaurant—if you forget your own while dining there, they'll bring you a Warby Parker.

Trend factor aside, these glasses do good. Prior to Warby Parker's kickoff, Blumenthal directed the nonprofit VisionSpring, which sells glasses at minimum cost to those living under the poverty line in developing nations. At Warby Parker, the boys tally up the number of glasses sold every month and donate a matching amount to VisionSpring and other nonprofits with the same mission.

So if you discover that your vision isn't what it used to be as you read your first edition of The Subterraneans on the Green Line, just do it—bust out that monocle.

THE SOPRANOS

There's been offstage drama in the opera world, given closings of companies like Opera Boston, which shuttered in January 2012 despite having recently staged the world premiere of Madame White Snake, a Pulitzer winner. But the fat lady has yet to sing: Evangelists are shredding the stuffy rep and cultivating new fans. Take Opera on Tap Boston, the young chapter of a national nonprofit that's bringing arias into bars. The vibe is casual, the performers up close—no opera glasses needed. "Instead of being on stage and in costumes far away, we're right next to you," co-director Abby Krawson says. "We're wearing jeans, and we'll probably have a beer in our hand."

In its first year, OOT Boston has provided post-show entertainment at the A.R.T., staged an intimate evening at 13Forest Gallery and secured a residency at Jacob Wirth, where singers from the 50-strong roster serenade the crowd on second and fourth Saturdays. "One night, we had a bachelor party at one end of the bar and a man celebrating his 95th birthday at the other," Krawson says. "You never know what to expect." Take one recent gig, when a first-timer's rendition of the "Toreador Song" from Carmen had a crew of 25 beer-chugging rugby players stomping and singing along. Some nights have themes—"Opera's Most Dysfunctional Relationships," say—while others offer a taste of a local company's new production. "We're trying to work with other companies to promote opera in general, not necessarily trying to promote ourselves," co-director Kathryn McKellar says.

A new venue, JP's Milky Way Lounge, will host the group's one-year birthday bash on May 8. It's a chance to expand OOT's reach—and to celebrate. "We approached a lot of bars.... They were daunted by the idea of opera," McKellar says. "Since then, people come to our shows and love it. In fact, when we first started, I thought, let's publicize ourselves as a cabaret group. But my boyfriend was like, 'No, no. People want to have an epic Saturday night.'"

TO LADIES IN LEGGINGS, BUT TO THE ONE ON NEWBURY STREET PARTICULARLY: Girl, I get it. Your body is kickin'. But consider wearing some Chonies with those leggings-as-pants so that I don't see your a-hole when you bend over to pick up that dropped bag. Or just bend at the knee, like the rest of us.

Just another a-hole

To Boston weather: Quit teasing us. There is nothing worse than having a beautiful, warm day and then following it with six days of dreary London-esque weather. I know this is classic New England, but after this past winter I think we're all in desperate need of some vitamin D.

Transparently pale

To squirrel feeders: Why? You are not at a petting zoo; you are in a public park. These squirrels are ballsy, and in my four years in Boston I have seen probably 10 tourists get bitten and somehow act surprised. For your own safety, go buy a hamster.

PSA

To the not-so-secret stoner: We all know that when you wander across the parking lot behind our apartments, you are not smoking a cigarette. If you were smoking a cigarette, you wouldn't walk behind a car every time someone walks by you. This is Boston dude, nobody cares.

Taking the high ground

To the man who demanded that I "pick a line" at Trader Joe's: Waiting in the middle of two lines that are the same size is usually customary, especially at Trader Joe's. But if you were curious about what line I was waiting in, you could have asked politely. Luckily, I picked the faster line, and got to leave the store before you even checked out. I hope the woman in line before you paid in pennies.

Toeing the line

To all the gents at Ball & Buck: Shoppers and shopkeepers alike—damn. I mean, damn. Thank you (and your genetic make-up) for being so good-looking. Keep up the deep-voiced, well-dressed work.

THIS LAND IS OUR LAND

A multigenerational novel set on Cape Cod

DURING THE 1940s, THE Mayflowery Porter clan occupies a privileged compound in the fictional Massachusetts seaside town of Ashaunt. Citing defense against invasion, the Army enters this small coastal community. Bea, the mothering Scottish nanny, is mortified when little Janie is sexually abused by a soldier. But another soldier, Smitty, tempts Bea with a twinkling courtship; her innocence, combined with the pull to stay with her employer family, wins out in the end.

The land of Ashaunt—truly a play on "haunt"—wraps itself around all the characters. In 1947, the spirited Helen Porter pens exuberant letters home from Europe. Later, she writes diaries as a grown-up balancing—with disgruntled unease—motherhood, graduate school and psychoanalysis.

The End of the Point
By Elizabeth Graver

Graver is a professor at Boston College.

The narrative voices—Nanny Bea, Helen Porter and son Charlie—are so varied and compelling that at times Graver makes it sound as if the characters are thinking to themselves in poetry, even in dreams. In the case of a hallucinogen-tripping Charlie, the passage nearly comes off the rails.

Charlie's adolescent distress and his loyalty to his family turf feel painfully authentic and oddly beautiful. The same can be said of his friendship with an alienated Vietnam vet, Jerry, who's several steps crazier than the young man, but is likewise in love with the land. Appropriately, he rails '60s-style against the "Military Industrial Golfplex." ×××

"Jerry met his eyes and nodded, and what passed between them was a slower, more labored version of the look they'd exchanged on the side of the road in June—Help me, follow, help—but something else now, too: not knowledge of each other, exactly, but knowledge's bent cousin, shadowy and wordless, an animal low to the ground."

ROCKY ROAD

A rough start at Louis DiBiccari's Tavern Road

Tavern Road
343 Congress St., Boston
(617-790-0808)
tavernroad.com

SAY CHEESE At Tavern Road in Fort Point, sides like the spaetzle are small but worth savoring.

AT TAVERN ROAD, AN EYE-catching 30-foot mural painted by Fort Point graffiti artists pays homage to chef/owner Louis DiBiccari's sculptor uncle, who can be seen staring contemplatively at the mound of clay he's in the process of molding. In the restaurant's open kitchen, the technologically savvy chef DiBiccari—formerly of Sel de la Terre, Storyville and the Iron Chef-inspired Chef Louie Night pop-up events—works with different materials to assemble dishes and expedite orders, while he busily wields his smartphone to take notes and snap teaser pictures for bolstering the restaurant's significant social-media presence.

Open a little more than two months, Tavern Road is still finding its stride. Certainly the staff is on top of its game, proving welcoming and friendly without being overly officious. Unfortunately, the food is less consistent. On one night, the seafood vichyssoise ($14) was inedibly salty. It was a waste of the three lovely, fresh Pat Woodbury littleneck clams that sat astride a sodium deposit. It also rendered useless the "Briefing Notes" that accompanied the menu, in which cookery catchphrases and the heritage of local products, like the clams, are explained in textbook detail. The octopus salad ($12), another starter, was more salad than seafood, with thick slices of tough, overcooked octopus acting as a garnish. Steak tartare ($14) arrived as big cubes of flavorless meat, lacking both seasoning and the buttery texture and marbling of a high-quality cut. Charcuterie ($4 each) were much more satisfying, especially in the case of the fat-speckled, spicy andouille sausage and the bluefish pâté. Ordered together, the sausage and the bluefish were a study in the transformative properties of smoke, emphasizing the assertive flavor of the pork while reinforcing the subtle sweetness of the fish.

Portions were reminiscent of those at steakhouses: Entrees comprised substantial pieces of protein, while sides required a separate order and appeared in toy-sized pans and crockery. Of the accompaniments, one solid choice was the spaetzle ($6), a Germanified mac 'n' cheese combining flour dumplings, Gruyère, béchamel, and pickled cherry peppers for a spicy, vinegary kick. Creamy polenta, cubes of fried cornmeal mixed with Parmesan and herbs ($6), was outstanding in its flavorful simplicity, as was the risotto with Swiss chard, pecorino and lemon ($6). The roasted mushrooms, ramps and chickpeas ($6) improved on a subsequent visit, when they were no longer glazed with a slick coat of oil, allowing their natural flavors to emerge.

Entrees were hit or miss. The duck ($18) was seared on the outside yet cold and rare on the inside, but the accompanying honey-lavender sauce compensated by lending the poultry a perfumed candy quality. The porchetta ($16) seemed to be a rather bland, glorified pork roast, despite a four-day prep and cooking process. Whole-roasted grilled sea bream ($19) was visually arresting, but the spicy scallions and garlicky sauce overpowered the fish's delicate flavor.

B.N.'s Picks

Spaetzle

Risotto

Duck breast

The only desserts offered were ice cream ($6) and chocolate-chip cookies ($1 each), which left an expanding circle of grease atop their parchment paper and a lingering taste of oil on the tongue. While the menu was well-priced for snacking, making it popular with Fort Point workers after office hours, the cocktails are less of a bargain ($10–$11), especially with Barbara Lynch's craft-cocktail progenitor Drink across the street. The Down and Brown, for example, was spot-on with today's rye and amari trend, but the proportions tasted skewed, with the Fernet Branca drowning out the whiskey and Benedictine.

But it's early days yet for chef DiBiccari and his co-owner brother, Michael. Their restaurant shows adaptability and promise in enough dishes—especially among the sides—to warrant a wait-and-see approach. ×××

ASK CHERYL

Q: CAN YOU PLEASE TELL ME ABOUT LASER HAIR REMOVAL?

A: Laser hair removal works by using light energy to permanently disable the hair follicle so it cannot produce new hairs. The laser light selectively targets hair follicles while leaving other tissue untouched.

Since hair grows in cycles, several treatments are required. Any hairs that are in the active growth phase and will be disabled by the laser. The remaining dormant hairs should be treated at a later date, usually in 4 to 6 weeks.

All areas of the body can be treated. The most popular areas for women are the underarms, bikini area, and legs. For men, the back, chest and shoulders.

Most people who have laser hair removal are incredibly happy with the results, but as with other laser procedures, make certain to select an experienced healthcare professional for optimal results.

BREATH OF FRESH AIR

Olivier Assayas' new film brings an innocence to rebellion.

Something in the Air ★★★½
Starring Clément Métayer, Lola Créton, Felix Armand and Carole Combes. Written and directed by Olivier Assayas. At Kendall Square and available via Video On Demand.

GILLES (CLÉMENT MÉTAYER) begins the movie by carving an anarchy symbol into his wooden school desk. He ends it as a much sadder, prematurely old man longing for his lost love on a movie screen. That encroaching disappointment is the drift of Olivier Assayas' Something in the Air, which was just recently, and stupidly, retitled for American audiences. The translation from the French title was After May, but here they must think we're all still crazy for Thunderclap Newman songs, because the new title just doesn't make any sense.

May refers to 1968, when Paris was rocked with demonstrations and politically ravenous students who rallied and stood up against injustices much bigger than the changes in the terms of service on their Facebook accounts. Of course, it didn't end well. But as anybody in a big city knows, it takes a little while for all the cool stuff to filter out to the suburbs, so Something in the Air (I really hate calling it that) picks up about three years later, just outside of Paris, where a bunch of teenagers don motorcycle helmets for a routine tear-gas-filled skirmish with the local police.

It's thrilling, the way Assayas films it. He should know, too, since he was there. This is the most blatantly autobiographical movie since David Chase's Not Fade Away, which similarly dealt with tumultuous times in a typically elliptical fashion. Both movies share the same stink of memory, with an attention to otherwise irrelevant details that makes them reek of authenticity. Period pieces often feel like plastic, but from the first frames, you can tell that you're watching something that was already lived-in and experienced.

> "From the first frames, you can tell that you're watching something that was already lived-in and experienced."

Gilles reads too much. When he picks up a book criticizing the Cultural Revolution, his colleagues are quick to inform him that it was written by the CIA. But Gilles isn't so sure. He's an artist who's obviously uncomfortable with the role of fire-brand activist that they've all been trying on lately.

Their antics flare up when they graffiti-bomb their local high school, and a stupid act of vandalism ends in a casualty. Then they're all on the lam, barely old enough to shave, and hiding out in Italy. In a weird way this works as a prequel to Robert Redford's recent The Company You Keep, which tracks down a few like-minded characters several decades later.

Gilles was once in love with Laure (Carole Combs), but she was crazy, usually naked and always looking for someone better. He settles for Christine (Lola Créton), who has similar passions and isn't so bad looking. Theirs is a dismal romance that goes exactly where you probably expect it would.

Assayas, who most recently helmed the marvelous Summer Hours and the gob-smacking, nearly six-hour terrorist epic Carlos, was quite the wild man in his early career. I didn't like his older films much, but they were bonkers. As with these last two masterpieces, Something in the Air is more refined, saner and accessible to everyone. There's a great bit in this movie where Gilles argues with the director of an awesomely tedious documentary about Laotian workers, and the latter explains to him his film is so boring because avant-garde filmmaking is for the bourgeoisie. You can feel Assayas wrestling out this very conversation in every shot of this picture.

Not that he doesn't get cuckoo once in a while. A bonfire party gone mad at Laure's could be a stand-alone movie of its own, and maybe the best of the year. But mostly Something in the Air is a film about fading out, about how youthful passions dissolve. The day-to-day business of living so often saps us of our resolve, and even the most ardent convictions wither away over time.

Revolutionaries become paper-pushers in an office somewhere, old friends lose touch, so Something in the Air doesn't so much build to a climax as it simply melts away. Gilles was never a dynamic character to begin with, but he recedes further as the film carries on, drifting into obscurity and often crowded out by supporting players who similarly flare and then vanish.

It's depressing as hell, and Assayas twists the knife in the final shot. We all end up like Gilles, eventually, sitting alone in a movie theater wondering what might have been. ×××

PRESSING ON

Charles Bradley opens his heart and soul to transcend everyday funk with hard-won catharsis.

Charles Bradley and His Extraordinaires play the Paradise Rock Club on May 18.

SOUL MUSIC ISN'T JUST A style for Charles Bradley. It's a reflection of a hard life filled with purpose and perseverance.

The story of the 64-year-old singer plays like a wild novel. As a homeless teenager, he found shelter on New York City subway trains. As a short-order cook, he worked jobs from Maine to Alaska to California, where he ended up in jail after a scrap with a neighbor. Back in New York to care for his mother, he endured a near-fatal illness and the murder of his brother. And he found an outlet for his gravelly, charismatic voice as a James Brown impersonator named Black Velvet in the barrooms of Brooklyn.

But Bradley's saga began to change about a decade ago when Daptone Records founder Gabriel Roth caught the singer's act and hired him for sessions. Roth introduced him to guitarist/songwriter Thomas Brenneck, who nurtured his talents, resulting in Bradley's acclaimed 2011 debut No Time for Dreaming. Roth found the male counterpart to Sharon Jones, his label's star singer, and Bradley found his calling.

"It's bittersweet," Bradley says. "It just took so long, man. It took so long, and I wondered how much youth I have left inside me."

Now, the young boy whose older sister took him to the Apollo Theater to see James Brown in 1962 will return to that iconic Harlem theater as his own man for a May 16 performance, two nights before Bradley and His Extraordinaires play the Paradise Rock Club.

> "So you can look into your soul, and help you with your life... This could be what I'm here for."

He remembers meeting with Extraordinaires guitarist Brenneck, who invited the singer to his house for a hot toddy. "I was walking around the city like a zombie with no one to go to, to talk to," says Bradley, who was despondent after bearing witness to the body of his brother, shot in the head with a hollow-point bullet. "I never had a chance to express myself until I got into this with Tom, because Tom wanted to know more about me."

Brenneck recorded their conversation, then ushered Bradley into his home studio, helping the reluctant singer transform details from the night of his brother's murder into the lyrics that became "Heartaches and Pain," the emotive closing track of No Time for Dreaming.

"The wound is healed, but the reflection is still there," Bradley says of that song, which he found difficult to sing onstage. Yet he realizes that listeners share his catharsis. "That's why I like to jump off the stage and go into the audience. [People say,] 'Charles Bradley, I thank you. You helped me get through my crisis.'"

Encounters don't stop after the stage lights go out either. There was the teenager trying to get past the loss of his mother, and the man who stopped his car to thank Bradley for testifying that all his fans are believers—in love. "If it's not coming from the heart, if I can't get onstage and give you some depth of my soul, so you can look into your soul, and help you with your life..." Bradley pauses. "This could be what I'm here for."

It seems hard to turn him to simpler, promotional topics such as his just-released sophomore album, Victim of Love, which expands his repertoire to lighter fare like the fingersnap-begging "You Put the Flame on It" and the neo-psychedelic "Confusion," which echoes the Temptations' experimental crossovers.

"My music is like a minister to me," he says. "I do get depressed, even on tour. I hide and sit in my little space. But it's not a place I should be. I gotta keep my mind forward. As my pastor says, you have to keep pressed in your way."

Bradley, who still lives in the Brooklyn projects and cares for his mother, says he hopes to help his nieces and nephews escape poverty. Even when he's off the road and gets calls from his old band to do a Black Velvet show, he doesn't refuse. "I don't think I'm too great that I can't come back to be with people that I love and see them play that deep-down soul music," he says. "Never turn your back on friends." ×××

KIDS THESE DAYS

Catching up with the millennials

EVERY OLDER GENERATION in history has complained about the young people coming up behind. Can you imagine being a parent in the 1920s during Prohibition, your daughters singing, "I Wish I Could Shimmy Like My Sister Kate"? Doing the Charleston and the Black Bottom, drinking bathtub gin out of hip flasks, smoking cigarettes stuck in long holders, going to illegal speakeasies, snorting cocaine in jazz clubs. Going straight to hell. Well, they're still doing that, according to their elders.

So I thought I'd speak to some young people throughout the city who've grown up post-9/11—the first generation in American history predicted not to exceed their parents economically. Is there any hope for them?

One young couple was having breakfast the day before the Boston Marathon. The man was an obvious runner, too thin, too intense. The young woman, not dressed in running gear, looked like she would survive him by 20 years. He stared into the distance beyond her. They ate, never speaking, only occasionally checking their phones for proof that somebody might be out there.

I asked my friend Molly, a smart obstetrician, about the millennials, who were born between the early 1980s and the early 2000s. "Well," she said, "it's obvious that they are waiting much longer to have babies, if they have them at all. Look at the wedding announcements. The women hit 30, bingo, the clock is ticking and marriage happens. As I see these unions, I feel that women are having their children much later than they should. Many reasons for this, of course. But the wives and husbands are exhausted at their ages, just plain tuckered out. It's not good for them. And it challenges relationships."

My wife and I had all of our three children by the time she was 27. At which point she would say, "I'm beat, and we need a vacation. No kids, I need a vacation from the kids." What a concept.

In zeroing in on these millennials, I've been wandering the city, asking those I encounter two questions: "Do you have a dream for your future?" and "Are you willing to bust your tail to achieve this dream?"

I tried this approach with the CEO of a company in the Financial District. He told me: "I don't know what's wrong with this generation. We have young people here, and on a Friday I say to them, 'I want you to stay late tonight and finish this report you're working on.' They say to me with shocked faces, 'We have plans for the weekend.'" He rolled his eyes. "When I started my first job, I would have been fired for saying that." Other employers have told me the same.

Sarah majored in economics at Simmons and now works as a sales assistant in a large financial firm. Her favorite movie is Jurassic Park, and her favorite book is Malcolm Gladwell's Outliers. "My parents were small-business owners, and I saw what it took to do that," she said. "Everything. I suppose this could push you either way. You could say, 'I never want to work that hard,' but I want to run my own business by 40 and be well-known in my community."

What have been the biggest surprises out in first-job land?

"In college," Sarah said, "I couldn't stand to be alone. You know, the horror of not having plans on Saturday night. Now, I find I need a timeout, some time alone. Maybe I'm just really growing up, getting independent. Not a bad thing. But now I'm looking at younger people as if we're old. My little 8-year-old cousin has a Facebook profile. Scary."

Almost all the young people I spoke with had the same long-term dream of owning their own business. This reflected their universal view of big business. "People are disposable to them," one said. "These companies don't offer the chance to really grow within the structure. We've all got our eyes on where we can move." One young man mentioned that many of his friends rejected the hard-work ethic. He said, "The work/life balance is important to us. Time to reflect, kick back." Several of them cited Outliers as their favorite book.

The real-life outlier I discovered was a young woman named Felicia who grew up in East Boston and had to work at an early age. Her mother had taught her that if you want it, you've got to earn it. She seemed feisty, with a killer smile that lit up her face. "I had a dream when I was younger," she said. "I love biology and physiology and wanted to be a nurse."

What happened to that?

She laughed. "I was terrified of needles." Felicia started working in restaurants in East Boston when she was 14, often working until 2 am. Then she'd go home, get up at 7:30, and go to school. "At 15," she said, "I could mix the best Mai Tai in the city." She owns her own home. "I know where I'm going to be in life," she said. "And I'm confident because I work hard and I'm not afraid of it. I know where my 401(k) is, and I pay attention to details. As far as other millennials are concerned, I pay no attention to the entitled people. They think stress is, 'Oh my God, I wanted a red car, and they gave me a blue one.' They pick up the phone and say, 'Dad, help!' They have no idea of what real stress is." She was an outlier, indeed.

There's a toughness learned in the restaurants of Eastie as a kid, along with that hunger for pocket money you earned yourself. Felicia's all-time favorite movie is Jim Carrey's The Mask. It's nice when people see life through ironic eyes. ×××

VACATION PLANNING

Finding true paradise this summer

IT'S THE TIME OF YEAR WHEN thoughts turn to summer vacations and making the tough decision about how to savor New England's bounteous options for warm-weather relaxation. Whether you prefer dodging 100-mph speedboats on Lake Winnipesaukee or fleeing from great white sharks on the Cape, sitting in gridlock on 95 North or stuck in traffic on Route 3 South, fighting bikers in Weirs Beach or just building a compost pile in the Berkshires, there's a fun summer trip out there for everyone.

First, you need to pick a spot. Should you drive or fly? Head for the beach or the mountains? A lot of people are now into staycations, where you don't go anywhere at all. I like to take it one step further and take a naycation, where you don't go anywhere and still go to work and everything. It's so much less hassle.

But let's presume you decide to go for a traditional respite for a week or two. A bit of scheduling flexibility could get you a rock-bottom price without all the jostling of peak-season crowds. For instance, if you think Chatham is too crowded during the third week of July, try it during the second week of January! Instead of being shoulder-to-shoulder in the Squire, it'll just be you and a sullen old man in a cable-knit sweater. What's he muttering about? Whales or tunas or something?

Alternately, I've heard of people who go to ski mountains in the summer. You might not know this, but ski resorts will do anything to get you there in the summer. They'll let you play Jarts off the ski lift or roll abandoned cars down the double diamonds or maybe just stand at the summit throwing rocks at trees. Summer is a great time to go to a mountain and think about how fun it would be if there were snow.

If you're on a budget, Groupon has a lot of great vacation deals, such as Cabo for only... oh, sorry, that one just filled up. But what about Arub—no, sorry again. That one's closed, too. Hey, have you heard of the Days Inn Methuen? It's got truck and bus parking and complimentary Daybreak breakfa—oh, never mind. It's full.

So maybe you should try Craigslist. Beware Craigslist ads for vacation places that seem suspiciously cheap or otherwise improbable. But once you've done some investigating and you're sure you're not getting scammed, feel free to tell your friends that you've had Western Union send out a deposit to secure your own private island just east of Nantucket! It's called Crablandia and it's so exclusive nobody has even heard of it. You guys will be ballin', though, as soon as you hear back from the owner, Johnny Americanman, about where to meet the submarine.

The day you leave, make sure you set an e-mail auto-response message saying you're on vacation. It should read, "I'm on vacation for the next week, and you're obviously not. If it is early in the week, then I will read your message and laugh at your mundane workaday needs while I drink cold beer at a tiki bar and subsequently take a two-hour nap. If it is the middle of the week, then I will listen to your message and then remark, 'Wow, it's Wednesday already?' If it is late in the week, then I will listen to your message while sullenly pondering the beach sand on the floor mats of my car, beach sand that will soon represent not a glorious present but a distant and melancholy memory of fun times past. If, the next Monday, I return to work and reply to your message only to get an automated response that you've just left on your own vacation, I will sell all my belongings and move to Costa Rica. Thank you."

Wherever you go, you should remember to post plenty of photos on Facebook so that your friends know how much to resent you. Also, how's anyone going to know when to rob your house if you don't tell them exactly how long you'll be gone? In any case, you should try to post interesting photos that nobody's ever seen before, like maybe a shot looking out toward your feet on the beach. Your friends will have a Being John Malkovich moment as they feel like they're experiencing your life, sitting right there on that towel, staring at your feet and contemplating the terrifying emptiness of thousands of miles of open water stretching out beyond the curvature of the earth. I don't get Jimmy Buffett.

Be sure to send me a postcard, which is like a tweet from the 1800s. Send it to Florida, though, because I'll be down there taking a Ray-cation, which is when you go to Miami and yell at Ray Allen. ×××

Soroff On WENDY WILLIAMS

The syndicated talk-show host and author talks about wigs, celebrity feuds and being a Jersey girl.

TALK-SHOW HOST AND AUTHOR WENDY WILLIAMS, 48, LAUNCHED her syndicated program, The Wendy Williams Show, in 2009, and it continues to be one of the highest-rated daytime TV shows, airing in 52 countries. Born and raised in New Jersey, she studied communications at Northeastern University and enjoyed an enormously successful 23-year career in radio, being inducted into the National Radio Hall of Fame in 2009. Her television credits include competing on season 12 of Dancing With the Stars and hosting the Game Show Network's original series Love Triangle. She was named one of the "35 Most Powerful People in Media" two years in a row by The Hollywood Reporter, and has written the New York Times best-seller The Wendy Williams Experience as well as several novels. Her sixth book, Ask Wendy, is out May 7. She contributes a regular column to the entertainment magazine Life & Style Weekly. Williams lives in New Jersey with her husband, Kevin, and their 12-year-old son, Kevin Jr.

Jonathan Soroff: What's next? Broadway?
Wendy Williams: What I wanted to be growing up, and when I was at Northeastern University, was a radio personality, and a wife and a mother. It was always important for me to balance work and personal life. The idea that my radio career would reach these heights—a TV show, books, acting—never even occurred to me.

So if I had told you 20 years ago where you'd be today, what would you have said?
Yeah, right. I knew I'd be successful, but I thought I'd be a marginal DJ, married to a successful fella with a happy home life and a happy family. And when I say success, I mean it in terms of happiness and quality of life.

Were you always a provocateur?
Yes. My report cards would always say, "Wendy talks too much." In high school, I was probably least likely to succeed. Academically, I was not an achiever.

Where do you keep your National Radio Hall of Fame award?
At home. We have a library, but I'm very sensitive about not wanting my home to be a shrine to my career and accolades. I share my house with other people, and everybody needs to feel good. But there is one shelf that's totally dedicated to my career.

Was Dancing With the Stars the hardest thing you've ever done?
Career-wise, yes. I'm not a dancer. Learning a new routine every week was tough. But I would have been a fool to turn it down.

Are you bent on total world domination?
No. But I do want my fair share of the pie.

Is doing your job harder than it looks?
Not for me, because I'm a natural-born communicator. I authentically love the roar of the crowd and making people laugh. I also have a terrific staff and an amazing and loving family. But you know what? I was doing hot topics back when I was on radio.

What makes you good at giving advice?
I think age is very important, because people don't care to ask opinions of a 25-year-old. At 48, I'm still growing and still screwing up, but I think a 32-year-old realizes I might have something to say about her relationship with her mother-in-law. A 38-year-old could come to ask if her mother should come to live with her, and I'm raising aging parents as well. I think people see me as a level-headed person who's been through some stuff. And honestly, you don't have to step in mud to know it's going to ruin your shoes.

Favorite celebrity feud?
I used to really enjoy Donald Trump and Rosie O'Donnell. It seems to have quieted down.

Are wigs easier than having hair?
Of course! It saves so much time. I get here in the morning at 8 am. I change into my robe. I take the wig that I arrived in off and hang it in my bathroom. Then in the salon area is a selection of wigs, and Antwon is able to style them while I'm in the other room getting my makeup done and prepped for the show. It's the best thing ever.

What do you look for in a wig?
A gym wig I prefer to be synthetic, as opposed to human hair, because they dry quicker. Synthetic wigs have a memory curl. When I want to look more sophisticated, I wear a mid-length or shorter wig, without so many blonde highlights. When I want to be the true Wendy, who's a showgirl, I'll have a 20-inch wig that tumbles down my back, with lots of caramel and blonde highlights. I haven't been to a hair salon in easily 14 years.

What are the chances your brand will expand to include a theme park?
[Laughs] Wendy Williams World? As long as they have the food! I love funnel cakes.

Celebrity you'd most like to bitch-slap?
I'm a little upset with Phaedra from Real Housewives of Atlanta. She started out seeming smart, and now she's seeming not too bright and rather sneaky.

One you're dying to get?
The Rock. I've loved him forever. Not in the "Do me, baby" sense, because he seems like he might be a little high-maintenance. I like a little salad dressing on my salad, and he'd be telling me no. So I'm not too interested in the relationship part, but I think he's probably so nice and interesting to talk to.

Tell me about being from Jersey.
OK, Jersey girls are gaudy, tacky and say it like they mean it. We always like our hair to be a little bit bigger. If I was at the Acropolis, I could spot a fellow Jersey girl. We talk with our hands. Our nails are always a little bit longer and redder. Our makeup is on a little bit thicker. Our tans are a little more orange... But I love my roots. If you watched my show on mute, you'd be able to tell I'm from Jersey.

You interned at Kiss 108 with Matt Siegel.
I got a chance to go back and thank him profusely. He didn't even realize how intensely I observed him. I learned so much from him. I do believe in paying homage. Matt Siegel is probably the single biggest influence in convincing me I wanted to pursue a career in radio. ×××

Nantucket's docks are broad brush strokes of brown and green, hugged tight by swirls of barnacles and algae. Small Monet-like splotches make up the cobbled streets, which are worn down as if the high tide keeps rising up beyond the beach and soaking the stones. The homes that line these roads are varnished in a bluish gray pigment. Ivy clings to their weathered shingles like the thick acrylic lines of seawater twine across the sand. Everywhere you look in Nantucket, you see a picture worth framing.

In 1851, Herman Melville wrote in Moby-Dick, "For my mind was made up to sail in no other than a Nantucket craft, because there was a fine, boisterous something about everything connected with that famous old island, which amazingly pleased me." Nantucket is a place where nature, painters' palettes and once-upon-a-time exist together. Writers and painters such as Melville, Eastman Johnson and John Steinbeck used the 3½-by-14-mile island as their retreat, finding inspiration in the bluffs and beaches. Even though the whaling industry dominated Nantucket for 150 years, the pen and the brush may now be more powerful than the ships tied to its shore.

Melville visited the island in July 1852 and most likely spent the night at the Ocean House, which is now known as the Jared Coffin House, a three-story brick mansion turned 43-room bed and breakfast. But even though 19th-century novelists haven't crashed here in quite a while, the inn is still pleasantly behind the times. In fact, "Welcome to 1845," the date the house was built by wealthy ship owner Jared Coffin, is embroidered on the pillows in the lobby. It's homey, with a décor that looks like a pre-Civil War version of Laura Ashley. The antique Victorian details, like painted porcelain lamps and floral patterned wallpaper, heal writer's block better than any modern architecture and clean lines could.

After Nantucket's whaling industry sank into folklore and unemployment, shacks along the wharf were rented out to artists, many of them disciples of painter and Woodstock Artists Association founder Frank Swift Chase. Known as the Nantucket Art Colony, these waterfront painters captured the former whaling community in seascapes that found the beauty beneath the disrepair. From this movement, the island's Easy Street Gallery opened in 1924, displaying the work of local and resident artists such as Anne Ramsdell Congdon, Emily Hoffmeier and Edgar Jenney.

Although wharf cottages are now far beyond an artist's budget and the Easy Street Gallery closed in 1943, the colony's tradition is continued today by the Artists Association of Nantucket, a spinoff of Chase's creation that started in 1945. Its two-story Joyce & Seward Johnson Gallery, located a few blocks away from Main Street, has a residency requirement of more than three consecutive months in order for artists to be considered. "It's a tourist town," curator Bobby Frazier says. "Tourism used to center around the beaches, but arts are now the primary reason why people come." With 15 exhibitions a year, its more than 200 artist members have ample opportunity to show off the island's local color. Vacationers can also participate by enrolling in the Association's workshops, which include drawing, mixed media, printing and ceramics. Additionally, it hosts a two-day outdoor painting event, the Plein Air festival, which is held this year from June 29 to 30. It encourages the same scenic exploration that began the colony's renaissance nearly a century ago. "There's a lot of opportunity for an artist here for a good income, or even to make their livelihood," Frazier says.

If the tourism influx is suppressing your similes, head to the quaint town of Siasconset (locals say 'Sconset) on the east side of the island, only seven miles and a $2 shuttle from downtown. With only 150 year-round residents, this rosebush-covered cottage sanctuary is home to towering bluffs along the beach and a century-and-a-half-old lighthouse, the Sankaty Head Light. This small town offered its own guiding light to John Steinbeck, who penned East of Eden here in the summer of 1951. And, just like Nantucket is home to fiction's most memorable whale, 'Sconset is the creative birthplace of Hollywood's most notorious shark. Peter Benchley wrote Jaws here in 1974, using the serene setting to conjure up an imaginary island and a crew in desperate need of a bigger boat.

"IT'S A TOURIST TOWN," CURATOR BOBBY FRAZIER SAYS. "TOURISM USED TO CENTER AROUND THE BEACHES, BUT ARTS ARE NOW THE PRIMARY REASON WHY PEOPLE COME."

For those who prefer Instagram as their artistic medium, Lola 41 restaurant is both gastronomically and aesthetically pleasing, no matter what filter you choose. Serving a hybrid of sushi and bistro dishes, Lola 41 draws its blend of cultures and flavors from countries along the 41st parallel—even down to the foreign coins cemented into the bar. "When you come into my restaurant, I like you to feel transported to somewhere else," owner Marco Coelho says. Start off with the Bite the Rhubarb Bulleit, a mixture of Bulleit Rye Bourbon, housemade pomegranate grenadine and orange and rhubarb bitters. Its deep orange glow and moonshine-strength burn are potent enough to trump absinthe as the literary crowd's vice of choice. The maruko roll—an avocado and shrimp tempura roll topped with spicy tuna, scallions, tobiko, spicy mayo and togarashi seasoning—is plated simply against a matte black slab, enhancing the collage of edible colors drizzled on your plate. But the must-have is the dulce de leche salted parfait, strategically layered with cookie crumble, pastry cream, salted caramel and homemade pretzels. It isn't the most delicate looking dish on the menu, but it has the potential to inspire sonnets.

Authors, painters and poets bring their pens and brushes to Nantucket, ready to create their own legends and masterpieces. The island itself is a workspace and a subject, easel and muse, weathered but willing. Melville described the people of Nantucket as "sea hermits," making the island sound like the ideal place of retreat. Maybe that's because, when the brush becomes heavy and the pen seems like a chore, an artist can just head back the beach, where it all began.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD

WRITTEN AND PHOTOGRAPHED BY JACQUELINE HOUTON

On summer Mondays in Martha's Vineyard, a gray-shingled former Methodist meetinghouse becomes a birthing room for new drama. Each week, the Vineyard Playhouse stages readings, offering sneak previews of material that might make the Broadway boards one day. You may see Tony Shalhoub with script in hand alongside local actors, or get to ask Joyce Carol Oates about her new characters at the post-show Q&A, all for a suggested donation of $25. At the night's end, you'll see these marquee names mingling and sipping coffee in the lobby, too.

It's a scene that exemplifies Martha's Vineyard's multiple personalities. In 100 square miles, the island manages to encompass celebs and politicos, farmers and fishermen, artists and craftsmen, manicured estates and untouched wilds, Oak Bluffs' Technicolor cottages and Edgartown's regal captains' houses. And not a single Starbucks. The Vineyard has a rep as a summer retreat for the well-heeled, but it's not just the Obamas and Hollywood heavies who flock here; it's a haven for culture vultures, too. Natural beauty and singular culture have drawn the likes of Shel Silverstein and William Styron, Lillian Hellman and Dorothy West, Thomas Hart Benton and Alfred Eisenstaedt, and many artists reside there today, despite a high cost of living and the merciless margins of a short tourist season—one that's been stretched by October's Fall for the Arts Festival, a monthlong smorgasbord of the island's rich cultural offerings.

The island spans six towns, so you'll want wheels. Take your car aboard the Steamship Authority's year-round vessels, or rent one on the island at the airport or near the ferry terminals—Hertz has a drop-off point across from the Vineyard Haven dock. Bikes and mopeds also abound. As for accommodations, the island brims with plush B&Bs, and if you're on a budget, there's the Vineyard Haven hostel, dubbed the world's friendliest by Hostelling International. For a resort, opt for the Harbor View Hotel, the Vineyard's oldest and largest hotel. Built in the elegant whaling port of Edgartown in 1891, the grande dame got new owners in 2006 and received a fabulous face-lift. Chef Shaun Brian Sells' contemporary fare is sourced from local farms and waters and, soon, his own kitchen garden. Lounge by the pool, take a sunset cruise in the 1966 lobster boat Stardust, or drink in harbor views—and a cocktail—in a turquoise rocker on the wraparound porch. The hotel also hosts arts happenings, such as the Martha's Vineyard Museum's PechaKucha nights of rapid-fire 20-image presentations, and the Aug. 3 kickoff of the Martha's Vineyard Book Festival, featuring Jamaica Kincaid, Richard Russo and Jill Lepore, among other scribes.

Vineyard Haven was named one of America's Top 12 Small-Town ArtPlaces for 2013, thanks to a high concentration of arts organizations and creative professionals. It's home to the aforementioned Vineyard Playhouse, which hasn't let renovations to its 1833 building slow its year-round programming. Those Monday Night Specials readings continue in July and August at the Martha's Vineyard Hebrew Center. And the Playhouse is again bringing the bard to the great outdoors, staging picnic-ready performances at the Tisbury Amphitheater; expect much swashbuckling when Henry IV plays from July 17 to Aug. 17.

The town's artisans include Anthony Holand of Tuck & Holand Metal Sculptors, whose custom weathervanes have drawn clients worldwide, from the Clintons to Steven Spielberg to Boston's own MFA. The studio began in 1974, when Travis Tuck created a great white weathervane to top Quint's shack in Jaws, then filming on the island. In 1996, he hired an apprentice, Holand, who took over when Tuck died in 2002. Now Holand has a two-year-plus wait for his copper repoussé creations. All are welcome to pay a visit, and you won't find molds in his cozily cluttered studio; Holand shapes each component by hand on wooden blocks that have been there since the start, sculpting every mermaid scale and rippling wave—and taking a personalized approach. He's traced a family's travels on a globe in gold leaf, silhouetted San Francisco's skyline for a West Coast transplant, designed a donkey frolicking with an elephant for a proudly nonpartisan federal official, and created a weathervane with all points labeled "West" for a family by that name. His favorite piece? "Whatever I just finished," he says, grinning.

Vineyard Haven hardly has a monopoly on unique craftspeople. The western town of Aquinnah is home to many members of the Wampanoag tribe, including acclaimed weavers, potters and jewelers, such as Berta Welch. She hand-crafts contemporary wampum jewelry, inlaying the quahog's purple shell with mother of pearl, abalone and turquoise, and sells her designs at her family's Stony Creek Gifts at the Cliff Shops at Aquinnah. Welch is also the president of the Aquinnah Cultural Center, found just down the hill. The museum offers exhibits and lectures on Wampanoag history, culture and language—deemed dead for more than a century but recently resurrected. (Now a few fluent Wampanoag kids get to correct the grammar of adults.) While there, take in the scenery—the Gay Head Cliffs are a national landmark, and sunsets are stunning. But gaze cautiously: The area is home to one of the island's few nude beaches.

Neighboring Chilmark is dominated by quiet farms and the quaint fishing village of Menemsha, but hidden in the town's rustic hills is a world-class dance destination: The Yard, a 40-year-old colony that hosts performances and artist residencies. This season's lineup includes Bridgman/Packer Dance's Voyeur, inspired by Edward Hopper's paintings, Faye Driscoll's sweaty faceoff You're Me, and tap and percussive fest Tap the Yard 2. Seemingly sleepy Chilmark also hosts March's Martha's Vineyard Film Festival, which stages summer film screenings at the Chilmark Community Center as well.

Chilmark borders West Tisbury, home to the Granary Gallery. Open daily year-round, it's the island's largest and oldest gallery, representing 75-plus artists. Down the road you'll find sister spot the Field Gallery, with three interior galleries and a beautiful sculpture garden. If you visit, check out Alley's General Store across the street. A convenience store and curiosity shop, it stocks junk food and fresh veggies, hardware and gardening supplies, stationery and handmade soaps, and a thousand things you didn't know you needed, from zombie cookie cutters to shark poop toffees. Want more substantial sustenance? Try State Road, whose upscale farm-fresh fare has clinched local best-of lists since its 2009 opening.

Last is the fun and funky Oak Bluffs, famed for its wildly hued gingerbread cottages, remnants of 19th-century Methodist retreats—after hearing four sermons a day, you might want to come home to something colorful, too. If you're feeling inspired, check out Featherstone Center for the Arts, whose bucolic campus hosts a gallery, weekly summer art markets and music performances, and classes in ceramics, painting, photography, and even cake decorating and hatmaking. Oak Bluffs also has an arts district, home to small gems like Alison Shaw Gallery, opened in a former one-engine firehouse in 2006 after Shaw's 25-year career at the Vineyard Gazette. She fills its white walls with her color-drenched photographs of Vineyard seascapes, Cape lighthouses, magenta-tinged Tuscan vistas and the controlled chaos of fellow artists' studios, abstracting familiar scenes into something sublime. Visitors often linger for conversation. If you stay for a chat, you might hear Shaw share a sentiment often repeated by islanders: "I came for a visit and never left." It's not hard to see why.

PROVINCETOWN

WRITTEN AND PHOTOGRAPHED BY
HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

Every summer, the Cape lulls us unwitting Bostonians into serenity, coaxing us into the sun in our salmon-colored shorts and oversized hats. We go there looking for rest, for lobsters, for inspiration. Artists of all walks have long found a haven in the Cape's expansive landscapes, tiny shacks and tight communities. Especially on the Provincetown tip.

Provincetown has a well-deserved rep for wild nightlife, replete with wigs and pumps to die for trouncing up and down Commercial Street between cabarets and dance clubs, all dotted with shots of "whatever she's having." But it's also one of the country's oldest artists' colonies, and every summer, some 80,000 seasonal residents pour in. Which is why you'll book lodging at the Brass Key Guesthouse early.

Centrally located, the Brass Key sits one block off Provincetown's main drag, giving you the benefit of being able to retreat at the end of a long night to quieter accommodations and get your beauty sleep. The duplex-style, yellow-painted buildings center around two courtyards, one with a fire pit and outdoor bar, another with a pool and hot tub. It's a contained community not unlike an apartment complex, though with far more amenities (5 o'clock complimentary wine and cheese hour, anyone?).

Pay tribute to artists past at the Provincetown Art Association & Museum, which features a permanent collection of nearly 2,000 pieces reflecting more than 500 artists, Heinrich Herman Pfeiffer, Andy Warhol and Marguerite Zorach among them. Admission is free after 5 pm on Fridays, and the museum, which celebrates its 100th anniversary next year, hosts special events throughout the summer, including film screenings, lectures, exhibit openings and auctions. Just follow the lawn sculptures at the eastern side of town to the mid-century building.

Another tenant of Provincetown's historic artist colony, the Dune Shacks take some effort to access, and not without reason. Located in isolation among the dunes at the end of Snail Road, some 19 shacks built between 1935 and 1950 from driftwood and other found materials stretch out over nearly two miles along the ridges and valleys between Race Point and High Head roads. These shacks have housed some of the greatest contemporary American artists and writers—Jack Kerouac wrote parts of On the Road here in 1950, and E.E. Cummings, Jackson Pollock and others spent time here as well. The shacks are still in use today by those drawn to total isolation (there's no running water or electricity), while the sandy hike through the dunes makes a picturesque escape on its own.

Although the Pilgrim Monument—that phallic tower that looms over the town—looks like a tourist trap, it's worth the climb up High Pole Hill Road for the vistas. Just wait for the clouds to break before heading out. Erected over three years beginning in 1907, the 252-foot tower remains the tallest all-granite monument in the nation. Don't let the height scare you—inside there are just 116 steps combined with ramps that get you to the top with minimal huffing and puffing. The 360-degree view once you're there, however, will take your breath away. A clear day reveals the Boston skyline, 42 miles away. Added bonus: Admission to the tower includes the Provincetown Museum near its base, which displays the taxidermied animals brought back from the arctic by Provincetown's Donald B. MacMillan, an early explorer. The dioramas include reconstructed captain's quarters and turn-of-the-century dollhouses with eerily intricate details.

Provincetown's Town Hall, which was renovated three years ago, illustrates the town's history as an artist colony. An old jail cell block in the basement has been preserved, and a massive auditorium with mezzanine-level seating features paint matched to the original hues of some 127 years ago. Look for the painting The Crew of Philomena Manta by Charles Hawthorne, who founded the Cape Cod Art School in 1899.

Nearby, the Unitarian Universalist Meeting House's interior features a second-level sanctuary with trompe l'oeil murals by Carl Wendte. The organ's been in use since 1847, and the pews, sourced from Provincetown's own white pines, are decorated with whale ivory medallions.

Art is sometimes meant to be purchased, so stop by Kennedy Gallery & Studios, a two-story gallery that sells coastal pictures on tile, posters and lithographs. For found art, visit Mother's Little Shop Around the Corner (it's the one with decapitated doll heads in the window). Despite the cluttered display, this quirky shop prides itself on tidiness and carries only items that come from Cape Cod homes. It's cash only though, so make sure to bring your wad.

Artists don't need to be starving, of course. A continental breakfast comes with a reservation at the Brass Key, and the cereal and granola spread is rounded out with yogurt, seasonal fruit, scones, bagels and fresh juices. But save your caffeine fix for Wired Puppy's original location, where the chai lattes are none too sweet and the rich espresso carries a crema thick enough for coffee-foam art. For a light panini lunch, try the Purple Feather Cafe and Treatery, finishing with artisan chocolates made on site. Romantic dining spots abound, but don't miss the Bistro at Crowne Pointe for modern American fare with a Cape influence. Make reservations for a table on the screened-in patio or near the fireplace inside, and learn why chef Robbin Haas is on Food & Wine magazine's top 10 chefs list.

Artists do need spiritual fortification, of course. The Harbor Lounge features three walls of full-length windows and a miniature pier, along with plentiful cocktails. Or wet your whistle near base camp at the Shipwreck Lounge in the guesthouse's lobby, where the bartender has the heaviest pour for your dollar. (An oversized red wine glass is filled nearly to the brim.)

GETTING AROUND

The easiest way to get to Provincetown is by sea. Boats leave from Boston Harbor regularly, and once in town, bikes will get you to the dunes and the Pilgrim Monument, while everything else is within walking distance.

If you drive, make sure to stop at Honey Candle in Orleans. The five-minute detour lands you at a modest shop that smells sweetly as soon as you walk in the door. Figures in cool hues collect across every surface, all handmade beeswax candles—seahorses, Buddhas, floating lotus flowers, votives and seasonal pieces, each with a raw, sans-polish look. Hundreds of candlesticks of all sizes and shapes hang over spindles like large, honey-scented wind chimes. It's not uncommon for the artisan himself—Agostino Di Bari, a native of Fasano, Italy, who opened the shop with his wife—to be strumming his guitar behind the counter.

THE SALTY, STORIED CAREER OF MARTHA'S VINEYARD'S CELEBRITY FISHING GUIDE

BY NANCY GAINES » PHOTOGRAPHS BY LISA VANDERHOOP

Buddy stands with his dog Amos, at center.

THE last time Keith Richards and Buddy Vanderhoop went fishing, Richards showed up at the dock, Grey Goose and grapefruit juice in hand, and poured a fresh one for each fish he caught. "And we caught a lot of fish," says Vanderhoop, who's been Richards' fishing guide and friend for three decades. "By noontime, he was plastered."

Later that day, Richards, his son, Marlon, and some pals from London chartered a vintage B-17, Vanderhoop recalls, and "all of a sudden the plane goes into a dive and comes within probably 100 feet of my boat's antenna. The pilot rammed the engines and made such a roar, my fishing clients hit the deck. Keith was in the front glass turret laughing his ass off."

With buzz of one sort and another under his belt, Richards had dinner that night with Vanderhoop and his wife, Lisa, who reports: "And he was still coherent. Keith reminds me of a twinkly bloke in an Irish pub, a great storyteller."

She should know. Buddy's one of the best. With his gold-capped tooth and gap grin, Vanderhoop looks more the part of a pirate than Richards or his cinematic relation, Johnny Depp. A member of an influential Wampanoag family, William Diamond Vanderhoop Jr.—always called Buddy—has been fishing Vineyard Sound since he was 4, when his father, a master guide, taught him to catch stripers, tautog and fluke. At 6, he recalls, out on the water with his younger brother, Rick, he caught a 25-pound bass, "almost as big as me. I was so proud." The die was cast.

Today, at 62, Vanderhoop is even prouder to be one of the island's top fishing guides. Of the last seven Martha's Vineyard Striped Bass & Bluefish derbies, he and his clients have won four, all with fish more than 50 pounds. Vanderhoop caught swordfish for 20 years before settling into his present niche in the mid-'80s, targeting striped bass, bluefish, fluke and offshore big game like tuna and marlin. And, of course, sharks. He's plied the waters off the Vineyard for nearly a half-century, he notes, making him the longest-running captain in the local trade. His Tomahawk charter charges rates of up to $4,350 for an overnight voyage, and he hauls in 200 or so clients per season, of whom about 160 are regulars. On his two boats, he shares captain duties with Robin Robinson and the business with Jennifer Clarke, the singer-songwriter and wife of comedian Lenny Clarke—another client and close friend.

Vanderhoop certainly doesn't demur from being billed as "guide to the stars." Richards has been a client, he says, since the late '70s, when they met at the island's Outermost Inn (owned by James Taylor's brother) and partied for three straight days during the Kentucky Derby weekend.

With his pick of the characters who summer in the Vineyard, Vanderhoop almost can't help making headlines. The tabloids, however, never picked up his snapshots of Hollywood heavies Michael Mann and Jim Belushi fishing in their underwear one steamy day. When he took Spike Lee out on the boat a decade ago—his first time fishing, says Vanderhoop—the filmmaker got a 57-pound striper and won the Governor's Cup for the biggest catch in Massachusetts that year.

Last summer, Olivia Wilde came aboard. Her mother, Leslie Cockburn, a documentarian and film producer who's worked for 60 Minutes and PBS, has been a regular of Vanderhoop's for about 15 years. "Holy smoke," he gushes. The daughter is "just as beautiful as on TV, even more so. Very, very nice, quiet. Even though she got a little queasy, she drove the boat and caught a nice fish."

The Clintons didn't fish, with Hillary having to hurry away for Princess Di's funeral, while the summer before last, the current Big One got away. But "I shook hands with Obama at Charles Ogletree's cocktail party," Vanderhoop says, adding that the famed Harvard law professor is yet another client. "I told [the president] I'd love to go one-on-one with him in basketball, and he said, 'You might know everything about fishing, but I know basketball.' And someone in the background said, 'The Vanderhoops'"—who were high school tournament stars—"'would kick ass.'"

VANDERHOOP DOESN'T DEMUR FROM BEING BILLED AS "GUIDE TO THE STARS." KEITH RICHARDS HAS BEEN A CLIENT SINCE THE LATE '70S, WHEN THEY PARTIED FOR THREE STRAIGHT DAYS DURING THE KENTUCKY DERBY WEEKEND.

As Buddy tells it: "The president said, 'Next time.' But I think he meant fishing."

A lifelong resident of Aquinnah ("I call it Gay Head") who harvests scallops in the offseason, Vanderhoop comes naturally by his prodigious shoulder-rubbing and storytelling. As he tells it—and he often does—when his grandfather, Leonard F. Vanderhoop, was a boy, he knew Tashtego, who was a real Gay Head harpooner, not just one in Moby-Dick. It's documented that Herman Melville knew Gay Head whalers from his sailing adventures, and visited there the year after the publication of his masterpiece. The author no doubt heard about, or even met, the formidable Tashtego. A 2001 article in the Vineyard Gazette, commemorating the 150th anniversary of the 1851 novel, notes: "Herman Melville probably didn't set foot on Martha's Vineyard before he wrote the classic book Moby-Dick, still he was fully aware of the Vineyard and its legacy, its link to the era of whaling... Tashtego, the Indian harpooner in Melville's tale, came from Gay Head."

And what Tashtego and crew couldn't manage, Vanderhoop's great uncle Amos Smalley did: kill the White Whale. In 1902, Smalley, who died in 1961 at the age of 84, harpooned and killed an albino sperm whale near the Azores in the Atlantic Ocean. He used a harpoon tipped with steel, as local legend and subsequent reports (including ones by Today Show host Dave Garroway in 1958, Reader's Digest, and, nowadays, Wikipedia) have it. The whale, estimated to be 100 years old, was said to be 90 feet long, covered with scars from many previous unsuccessful attempts to take it. Vanderhoop still has a tooth his uncle scrimshawed and gave him when he was 10, claiming it was from Moby Dick himself.

Vanderhoop would name a beloved dog after his whaling uncle, while his wife, Lisa, made a name for herself photographing local canines for her popular Vineyard Seadogs calendar. ("A fetching gift idea.") And, indeed, what would the Vineyard be without its heritage and pedigree? Not to mention its animal relations? Vanderhoop, an accomplished hunter of the deep, has flirted with controversy with other prey.

In 2003, while supervising the annual herring run, as he had for 35 years, Vanderhoop took issue with the hundreds of cormorants camped at the herring pool, devouring the fish prized by the islanders as bait.

"They were gorging themselves on these penned-up fish that we need to make money, and need to spawn to keep the fish population going," Vanderhoop says. "So I got my 12-gauge. It was so much fun to shoot them."

Because the legally protected birds were on tribal lands, Vanderhoop wasn't prosecuted. But the tribe banned him from the herring creek for a year.

"People were pretty pissed off," he says, in retrospect, while wife Lisa counters, "But we got hundreds of calls saying 'You go!'"

Popular—or annoying, depending on your perspective—as he is, Buddy knows his profession. "Yes, I do particularly well," he says, "because my father taught me very critical things. Where to fish, what bait to use, the tides, the presentation. They're all part of the game."

"Buddy put the char in charisma," Lisa says. "He can make you—I should say, me—crazy; he can embellish. That Native American thing, he can knock it over the head." Lisa smilingly observes, "I think he represents a modern-day pirate to these guys he takes fishing, and they love it. The more gnarly it gets, they are living on the edge of excitement."

Buddy likes to tell how that other outlaw, Keith Richards, says he wants to make a fishing show with him. "He wants to catch a great white off Australia's Great Barrier Reef," Buddy says. The plan would be to team up with some of Vanderhoop's pals, including award-winning filmmaker Bob Nixon and Trev Gowdy, host of Outdoor Channel's Trev Gowdy's Monster Fish.

JAZZED UP

TO COMBINE MODERN dance with jazz classics may seem like an intimidating task, but when you've been doing it across the world for more than 50 years, it's as simple as the two-step. Pairing jazz and ballet with classical and soul tunes, the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater has sashayed for an estimated 23 million people in 48 states, 71 countries and six continents. The show pairs diverse dances choreographed by greats such as Kyle Abraham, Alvin Ailey and Jirí Kylián with music by artists ranging from Mozart to Nina Simone and Dizzy Gillespie. See the whole song and dance from May 16 to 19 at the Wang Theatre.

Beach Booty

Captain Crook Looting and swigging rum aren't the only things pirates are good at: Turns out they've got exceptional math skills, too. When a band of song-loving swashbucklers discover their departing apprentice Frederic was born on a leap day, they extend his period of servitude until his real 21st birthday, when he'll be 84 years old—which throws a bit of a wrench in the young man's new romance and his plans to lead a police raid on his old crew. Trading britches for short shorts and swords for acoustic guitars, Chicago-based theater group the Hypocrites reimagines the classic operetta The Pirates of Penzance with beach balls, kiddie pools and floaties. See them make a splash at the American Repertory Theater through June 2. Tamara Omazic

Funny Business

It's a bird! It's a plane! No, it's a transgender comedian. Ian Harvie's debut stand-up comedy film is titled Ian Harvie Superhero for a reason. When the infamous Margaret Cho raves about you, it's a clear sign that you must have superhuman comedy strength. Born a girl, Ian is now a self-made man, and isn't afraid to crack a joke or two about his journey. With topics ranging from politics to relationships, this film is as groundbreaking as it is relatable, no matter what your background might be. Come out and show your pride on May 11 at the Boston LGBT Film Festival at the Brattle Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (In the suburbs.)

The Angels' Share ★★★ Ken Loach is not known for his sense of humor. He puts out marvelous movies year after year that I never want to watch more than once. Always full of despondence and desolation, they're typically filmed in Glasgow, where the accents are so thick that the movies arrive here with subtitles even though they're ostensibly in English. (I can't make out a word of them.) Loach's universe is one of small-time crooks, photographed in an artless vacuum of staid camera placement and ugly backgrounds. But The Angels' Share is different. It might be the first Loach movie you could call "jaunty." That stupid Proclaimers song that was such a ubiquitous earworm during the 1990s plays here more than once during wacky comedic montages, and then again at the end. While I would normally walk 500 miles just to get away from the tune, it kind of works here. It's Glaswegian miserablism with a fairy-tale Ocean's Eleven twist. I guess at age 76, Loach decided he had to lighten up at some point. (At Kendall Square.)

The Company You Keep ★★ ½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former member of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Disconnect ★ One of those deadly serious "everybody is connected" parables that were all the rage about 10 years ago, this magnificently misguided effort tells three interlocking stories of lives ruined by Wi-Fi. Pitched somewhere near the somber worst-case scenarios of a driver's education training film, it's Reefer Madness with smartphones. The title is more of a command: Unplug your modem or certain doom lies in wait. Early on, it becomes impossible not to imagine screenwriter Andrew Stern as Grandpa Simpson, waving his cane and telling all you kids to get your damn Twitter off his lawn. Lord knows, online bullying and child exploitation are serious problems, and obviously our era of connectivity has left us vulnerable to cybercrimes. But the film's incessant alarmist tone is laughably unconvincing. For most sane, well-adjusted folks, using the Internet is just a fact of life, not a cause for garment-rending hysteria. Millions of people meet and communicate online every day; it's really not the end of the world, dude. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

G.I. Joe: Retaliation ★★ It's a few cuts above 2009's unwatchable G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra, and maybe the best movie anybody could make based on a cartoon that only existed to push Hasbro toys back in the 1980s. I'm not sure if that's damning with faint praise or just exhausted resignation. Dwayne Johnson gives another one of his endearing, overly sincere performances as the leader of an elite military squad suddenly under attack when a shape-shifting supervillain passes himself off as the president (Jonathan Pryce) and starts dropping bombs. There's also some stuff about ninjas. Dancer-turned-director Jon M. Chu, of Step Up sequel fame, at least keeps the tone agreeably stupid and the action easy to follow. Pryce hams it up with riffs on birther paranoia, but the most unintentionally amusing flourish is Bruce Willis' glorified cameo as a retired general turned survivalist gun nut. To call Willis' performance phoned-in would imply that he could be bothered to dial a phone. He looks disgusted that this movie even exists, and he's not alone. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ginger & Rosa ★★★ ½ As the Cuban missile crisis raged on, across the pond we've got an apocalypse of another kind in this autobiographical remembrance from writer/director Sally Potter. I'm afraid it's been lost in the shuffle of bigger, showier releases, but this is a fabulous film, vividly realized and anchored by a brilliant performance from young Elle Fanning, rendering the usual teen angst and disillusionment as something both deeply felt and oddly mysterious. Ginger's long road of disappointment is exacerbated by her friendship with the troubled Rosa, played here by Alice Englert, a steely screen presence who had little to do in the recent witchcraft swill Beautiful Creatures. The only spell she casts here is on Ginger's dad, whom Alessandro Nivola depicts with an awfully annoying air of self-serving moral superiority while making one bad decision after another. It wouldn't work without Fanning, who is so tough, transparent and aching. In one close-up after another, there exists a rollercoaster of emotions. Ginger's never as old or as wise as she thinks she is, but she's getting there. (In the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (In the suburbs.)

Lore ★★★ ½ I guess I never stopped to wonder what happened to all those cuties in the Hitler Youth after their parents lost the war. This tough-minded, visceral picture from Australian director Cate Shortland tracks a gaggle of stern Aryan kids abandoned after their S.S. officer parents are taken away by the Allies. We see all this through the eyes of the eldest, Hannalore, played with a sharp edge by Saskia Rosendahl. She's left in charge of leading her siblings—including a newborn baby—through the Black Forest to their grandmother's house, and the only help comes from a dashing young Jewish lad, which naturally pits Hannalore's burgeoning sexuality against her deeply ingrained bigotry. Germany immediately after the fall is a deadly maze of looting, violence and desperation, shot in tight, low-angle close-ups to approximate the characters' point of view. Lore is a tough, survivalist fable that stays with you. (At West Newton.)

No ★★★ ½ Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer a TV-ad campaign for a referendum vote that just might kick Chile's brutal dictator Augusto Pinochet out of office. While idealists in the various political parties think the airtime should be used to expose Pinochet's atrocities, Bernal's boy wonder sells democracy as a product like any other—with rainbows, jingles, silly comedy sketches and even a mime. No's most cutting gag is just how much these political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good because the people casting votes are generally stupid. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Olympus Has Fallen ★ ½ The second worst Die Hard movie of the year finds Gerard Butler playing a disgraced Secret Service agent who becomes our country's last hope after some nasty North Korean terrorists blow up most of Washington D.C. and hold the president (Aaron Eckhart) hostage in the White House bunker. A deliberate throwback to junky mid-'90s thrillers such as Air Force One and Executive Decision, Olympus Has Fallen severely misjudges the cheese-to-violence ratio, with Training Day director Antoine Fuqua lavishing his attention on innocents shredded by machine gun fire, cold-blooded executions and women being brutalized. It's hard to surrender to such a preposterous, cornball potboiler when your face is constantly rubbed in human suffering. Somebody also apparently miscalculated the budget, as this is the cheapest-looking movie in theaters right now. Bargain-basement CGI effects induce unintentional laughter, while the second half of the film is Gerard Butler skulking through dimly lit hallways. There are a lot of solemn patriotic platitudes, and Butler sticks his knife in people's skulls. Isn't crap like this supposed to be fun? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper co-stars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Reluctant Fundamentalist ★★ ½ Harvard-educated Mira Nair is best known for culture-clash dramas about assimilation, such as The Namesake or Mississippi Masala. So the gritty espionage-film trappings of her new adaptation of Mohsin Hamid's novel may throw you for a loop at first. We've got abductions and more than one shadowy CIA agent. None of these genre elements are handled particularly well at the start, but give the movie a half-hour and you'll settle into a typically thoughtful Nair tale of a young Pakistani (Riz Ahmed) with his heart set on making it as a Wall Street master of the universe. (He even lands a rich, white girlfriend played by Kate Hudson.) But 9/11 changes everything, and he's soon profiled and bullied clear out of town and into radical Islam. Cleverly and unsubtly equating the inhuman practices of financial robber barons with extremist terrorists, the movie is more interesting than good. A maudlin musical score and ham-fisted dialogue detract from some incendiary ideas. (At Kendall Square.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Spring Breakers ★★★★ The latest outrageous provocation from Trash Humpers auteur Harmony Korine is sort of like what might happen if Jean-Luc Godard directed a Girls Gone Wild video. A toxic barrage of flesh, drugs and oceans of beer, the relatively plotless polemic finds three morally bankrupt college girls (Ashley Benson, Vanessa Hudgens and Rachel Korine) dragging their goody-goody best friend (Selena Gomez, who plays a gal so religious she's actually named Faith) on a mind-numbingly lurid spring-break bacchanal. They're bailed out of a jam by James Franco's white rapper Alien—the kind of instantly iconic character every dude in a dorm room is going to be for Halloween this year. Barely recognizable under the cornrows, oversized shades and grills on his teeth, Franco brings a contagious self-delight to his empty-headed machine-gun posture. Fetishizing the bikini-clad decadence with sumptuous cinematography, Korine wallows in the junk culture he's excoriating. In other words, the movie has its cake and then eats more cake. Breathtakingly edited in hypnotic patterns of repetition, Spring Breakers is some kind of sicko masterpiece. (In the suburbs.)

Trance ★ ½ This film is just more short-attention-span theater from director Danny Boyle, who, as usual, spends so much energy spinning the camera and whirling around to techno music there's no time to notice the story he's telling is bunk. Egregiously stupid, even by the standard of trashy heist thrillers, Trance stars James McAvoy as a smarmy auction house employee who lifts a $25 million Goya painting and then bonks his head and forgets where he left it. That's right, amnesia. He's in deep with a gang of shady crooks led by Vincent Cassel, who of course decides that all the young lad needs is some hypnotherapy. Enter Rosario Dawson, va-va-vooming it up as one of the least credible mental-health professionals we've seen onscreen in a while. She hypnotizes him (let's face it, Rosario Dawson hypnotizes everybody), and the screenplay begins to contort itself into one asinine, outlandish development after another. By the time pubic-hair grooming becomes an actual key plot point, you'll wonder if all involved have also suffered head injuries. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

(Vampire) Weekend Update

Trilogy

Their debut show was in a basement battle of the bands, but these Columbia grads are now in a league of their own. Vampire Weekend, with its signature African-pop meets indie-rock sound, returns three years after the quartet's sophomore effort, Contra, topped the charts. The band's latest album has been accompanied by some unusual marketing, including announcing the May release of Modern Vampires of the City in the New York Times classifieds and teaming up with actor Steve Buscemi to direct a recent concert. Expect the much-anticipated album to bring the usual Kennedy references and clever rhymes, but with a global vibe also exploring a new, darker side. The wait is over May 15 at Agganis Arena.

Island Life

Hues of pristine summer blue contrast with stark shades of fall in Neal Rantoul's collection of aerial photographs taken off the coast of Martha's Vineyard. Rantoul's serene and soothing images of the island's coastline are elegantly abstract as sand and surf appear as swirls and whirls. The Cambridge native and former head of Northeastern's photo program displays his works alongside fellow photographer Brian Kaplan's eerie images of offseason Cape Cod in their collective exhibit, Views From Cape Cod and the Massachusetts Islands. Dive in through May 13 at the Panopticon Gallery at the Commonwealth Hotel.

West Memphis Free Trial & Tribulation

Arrested at the age of 18, Damien Echols spent the next 18 years of his life imprisoned on death row. Convicted in the murder of three 8-year-old boys in the Robin Hood Hills of West Memphis, Ark., he was part of the West Memphis Three. In later years, a wave of documentaries and songs trumpeted the trio as innocent. The cause célèbre raised money for the fight for their release, which came in August 2011 after a deal with prosecutors in the wake of new DNA tests. Echols releases his rage at the justice system in his heartbreaking new memoir, Life After Death. Hear his tale on May 10 at Porter Square Books.

BONUS POINTS AND A BALL OF STRING TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER TESTING WIND SPEEDS AT THE LOTTO INTERNATIONAL KITE FESTIVAL IN OOSTENDE, BELGIUM, ON MAY 11–12.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

At their Boston wedding, Tricia Wurster and Mark Kuper asked their music act to just do covers.

In Playa del Carmen, Mexico, Lauren, Paula and Alexis Honzik read about Matt Damon and John Krasinski's newest project, Good Jim Halpert.

Monika Bach Schroeder and Chris Schroeder were fortunately lava-free during their visit to the base of a volcano in La Fortuna, Costa Rica.

Former New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani smiled for this photo, but he was crying inside knowing that his beloved Improper isn't available in the five boroughs.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

SENSE-SATIONAL

'I See!' Said the Blind Man

Guests at Dining in the Dark, held at the Mandarin Oriental, could be forgiven for questionable table manners. The fundraiser for the Foundation Fighting Blindness had guests dining in complete darkness to gain insight into the challenges of the blind community.

Thankfully, no one was blindfolded during the cocktail hour (handling a martini glass in a crowded room is difficult enough as it is), but once they were led into the ballroom, they wore special light-blocking masks and ate dinner using only their senses of smell, hearing, taste and touch.

Spotted before the lights went out: statuesque brunette Anne Tamer Hajjar and her real estate mack daddy, Chuck, Nantucket muckety-muck Gordon Gund, big-pharma bigwigs Amar Sawhney, Art Driscoll and Scott Corning, investment guru Bryan Plourde, scintillating scientist Hong Ming Chen, tall, dark and studly Adam Goulburn, Gallic fun-boy Cedric Francois (who, amusingly enough, is Belgian), and one person who said, "The biggest difference between big pharma and the VC guys is that we have a company and they have the money."

The evening's most entertaining remark, however, came from the gentleman who said, "This is great. I can pick my nose during dinner and no one will notice."

Nutrition's Overrated

It was a delicious combination of voyeurism and gluttony when Susan G. Komen for the Cure hosted its fifth annual Chefs for the Cure at the W Residences.

The voyeurism came courtesy of the model condos where guests circulated, while the gluttony was courtesy of such participating chefs as Joanne Chang of Myers + Chang and Flour, the Granary Tavern's Keenan Langlois, and Brian Reyelt of Citizen Public House, to name but a few. However, the evening began with a VIP reception in one of the penthouses, hosted by redheaded radio siren Kennedy and Taranta chef Jose Duarte, who did a cooking demonstration and helped raise money with handmade aprons during a live auction. The folks from Nespresso, meanwhile, taught guests how to treat coffee in a similar fashion as fine wine.

Art Driscoll, Amar Sawhney and Scott Corning at Dining in the Dark

Kennedy at Chefs for the Cure

Chuck and Anne Tamer Hajjar at Dining in the Dark

Chantelle Conti and Scott Galinsky at Chefs for the Cure

Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro at Save Venice

Paul Siegenthaler, Shane M. Merriweather, Alexandra Freyer, Justin Walter and Carolyn Riggs at Save Venice

Unlike most food events, seconds (and even thirds) were encouraged, and among the prominent throng were such do-gooders as redheaded vixen Chantelle Conti, the devastatingly handsome Scott Galinsky, expectant parents Bruce and Elisabeth Percelay, the impossibly bubbly Jillian Kuzyk, board members Christian Megliola and Tracy Curley, and one man who said, "If I had a ton of f-you money, I'd buy this penthouse in a second."

The evening's funniest remark: Referring to a guest, one friend said, "That girl lives exclusively on Pixy Stix and cheap white wine."

A Rowdy Night at the Library

Venetians are deservedly famous for their ability to party, but the Boston chapter of Save Venice gave them a run for their money when they hosted their annual gala, appropriately enough, at the Boston Public Library.

The black-tie-and-carnival-mask event raised money to restore a painting by Titian in the Jesuit church of Venice and was designed to highlight the links between the BPL and the Biblioteca Marciana. It attracted a high-octane crowd, among them co-chairs Richard Baiano and Gina Morda, art historian Frederick Ilchman, compulsive collector Juan Prieto, Cambridge chatelaine Barbara Lloyd, the swanlike Trevania Henderson and the debonair John, mythical creature Ben Bradlee Jr. and the unsinkable Jan Saragoni, blonde beauty Jody Saarmaa and the dashing Erik, arts patrons Wendy Shattuck and Sam Plimpton, silver fox Susan Paine, fashion plate Alison Quartermain and one person who said, "If Venice is gonna sink, I'm gonna need a drink."

Cocktails were followed by an elegant dinner, which gave way to dancing and more drinking, in true Venetian style.

The evening's archest remark: "I love when they invite you to these things that are $1,000 a head, and then they tell you that $25.86 is tax-deductible." ×××

Om Shreem Maha Laksmiyei Namaha

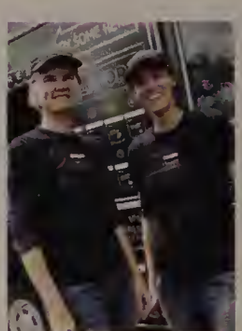
Adam D. Tow

I recently attended a talk on Hindu iconography in which the speaker trooped out a slew of religious statuettes, available for purchase and ideal for accenting a mantelpiece or credenza. He talked about Jungian archetypes, the transmigration of souls and payment plans for a really nice Shiva-Nataraja. I found myself gravitating to a bronze Lakshmi. She's the goddess of beauty and wealth, a luminous deification of style (possibly Gangnam) who showers her devotees with worldly gifts like sex appeal and cash. But the speaker looked me up and down and said, "For you, I think Saraswati."

This turned out to be the goddess of knowledge, a sort of cosmic Lisa Simpson, although instead of a saxophone she plays a stretch-necked lute. Saraswati, being wise, warns us of the vanity of appearances, of the metaphysical insignificance of rocking a Stella McCartney dress. Yet she's often paired with Lakshmi, who, if she weren't a goddess, would probably have a great future in marketing.

Are appearances meaningless? In the wheel of existence, is style a silent howl in the void? The answer, obviously, is oh my God no. There's a reason the words "life" and "style" are conjoined. Without Lakshmi, Saraswati would be insufferable. She'd end up lurching around the street in an absinthe haze, dribbling lines of Camus and forgetting to wear deodorant. You need Lakshmi to humanize the big, sticky pandimensional muddle. She makes it fun.



To wit, in this issue Jacqueline Houton surveys swimwear design, Lydia Santangelo looks at island fashions and Hannah Lott-Schwartz packs the perfect carryall for a summer's day.

Fest for the Wicked

FINE TUNES >>

THE TITLE TRACK OF THE Clash's 1979 album London Calling is a dystopian dirge about a city's disintegration, but Mike Snow and Brian Appel of Crash Line Productions are giving the reference an upbeat spin. The Boston Calling music festival aims to draw people together. "It was time to create something for Boston that was happening in other major cities around the country," Snow says. "Boston is a very transient city, and it leaves its mark on people. We want everyone around the country and world to get to know this city."

Come Memorial Day weekend, some 20,000 people will take over the brick and concrete landscape of City Hall Plaza, where Snow says they'll encounter local food trucks, brews and wines. It's a huge step for Boston, which has never hosted an outdoor, multi-day, ticketed music festival.

The event brings 18 bands to two stages—never overlapping—with local acts Bad Rabbits [pictured, page 11] and Caspian playing alongside the Shins, Of Monsters and Men, Andrew Bird and others. Snow and Appel had help curating the indie-heavy lineup from Aaron Dessner of the National, a New York–based group from Ohio that's also performing at the fest.

"Boston has a long-standing music scene that's very diverse," Snow says. "Hopefully [the festival] will inspire more musicians to thrive here instead of moving to other major cities to write and record once they've proven themselves."

Though the details are hush-hush as of press time, Snow hints that plans are already in the works for next year's installment. Which is great news for fans—general admission for this year's Boston Calling is sold out.

Good Eats

Chaat Roulette

The season for tikka masala and stew-like curries ended when the snow melted. Now it's prime time for chaats, Indian street-food snacks built on a raucous jumble of flavors and textures. Central Square's Dosa Factory peddles nearly a dozen variations, the best of which include dahi bhalla (lentil fritters), teekha jheenga papdi (cubed potatoes with shrimp) and green apple and paneer. Most come with thick yogurt, bracing chutneys and—if you want—plenty of heat. They're best enjoyed while sitting on the restaurant's new patio furniture with a glass of fresh-pressed carrot-apple-ginger juice.

THE PASTRY IS PROLOGUE

ALTHOUGH LEE NAPOLI has earned a considerable reputation as a pastry chef (Maison Robert, Sandrine's, etc.) and chocolatier (Chocolee), savory balances sweet in her newest project, Bread + Butter, a bakery and café slated to open in late May on the edge of the North End. Located in the former Caffè Graffiti space, it's much more expansive than Chocolee, with 25 seats inside and 50 outside overlooking the Greenway. "Expansive" also describes the outlook of Napoli's business partner, Brian Lesser, who already envisions a future of multiple Bread + Butters. "It fills a really big niche," he says, for high-quality, moderately priced breakfast and lunch offerings.

In the meantime, the menu features items such as a breakfast pizza (which Napoli describes as "a thin, yeasted dough with a spread of fromage blanc and savory toppings like ham and bacon"), a duck confit sandwich on house-baked bread, and queen's pastry, a Breton treat that's sweet with caramelized sugar, savory with a touch of salt and rarely seen here in Boston. "Nobody else in the city makes it [regularly]," Napoli says.

ON THE ROX Look for a late-June opening for Rox Café in Newton Highlands, in the old Bakers' Best space. It's the third project from co-owners John Fortin and Paul Louderback, the team behind the Rox Diners in West Roxbury and Newtonville. Marking a departure from the diner concept, the 60-seat Rox Café will feature a dining room, a to-go market, and a U-shaped "conversation bar" that will serve up a wide variety of libations, including biodynamic wines and craft cocktails.

First Taste

BEST OF THE WURST

"This place is beer, sausage, bread," says Tim Wiechmann of his latest venture, Bronwyn. Just opened in Union Square, the restaurant borrows its European focus from Weichmann's German heritage, while its name is borrowed from his wife.

But this isn't your kitschy, dirndl-clad concept. It's classic European, with dark repurposed wood and antique Gothic chairs in the tucked-away dining room. Wiechmann used beams from an old farmhouse to build benches for two large communal tables that share a wall with the raised patio. He also repurposed rubble from the demolition of the old space to create the large wooden heart that hangs behind the bar. It's an intimate, well-curated space, and you'd never guess it seats 100, which is exactly what Tim and Bronwyn wanted—a sense of barren elegance.

That sentiment carries over to the drinks list. Bronwyn stocks 10 drafts and another 25 bottles, from many European nations. But it's the schnapps that are the main draw. "In Austria, schnapps is a serious thing," Tim says. "Because they grow so much fruit, everybody handcrafts these great liqueurs." The list that appears at Bronwyn takes the place of fine whiskeys at other establishments. These are meant for sipping.

The real craft, however, is apparent in the food. Bronwyn employs a full-time baker to make five breads in house daily. A dark, traditional pretzel is made fresh every hour and served with a housemade roasted apple mustard. There's also challah with honey and oatmeal, German Roggenbrot and Baumbrot and a juniper cracker.

To accompany the breads, Wiechmann prepares a selection of six sausages. "But the sausage menu is not charcuterie," he says. "It's not dry aged, it's not soppressata—it is German fresh sausage, like, we make them every day, cook them, sell them and that's it." Served atop bread and with a side of seasonal slaw, the Bavarian sausages—including the veal, turkey and pork curry-wurst—are Bronwyn's staple.

Other menu items include sauerbraten, or German pot roast, which is similar to a corned beef but features more vinegar, and an asparagus salad in which the vegetable is roasted, shaved and topped with crumbled gingerbread and almond vinaigrette. There's also grilled salmon, prepared with fresh hops—something that few chefs attempt as it's hard to avoid the hops' natural bitterness. But Wiechmann pushes on. "I want my salmon to smell like a glass of IPA," he says, laughing, but is totally serious. "That's a good idea, right?"

Q&A

A FRIEND IN KNEAD

Flour Bakery + Cafe owner Joanne Chang signs copies of her new cookbook, Flour, Too, at the Harvard Coop on May 30.

Why is there more of a focus on savory dishes in this book?

When the first book came out, it was intended to be just a baking book. Then, as I was writing it, my publisher really wanted the focus to be about Flour, which is fine, because most of my baking experience is at Flour anyway. I was really surprised at how many people reached out and said, "Love the first book, but man, where's the recipe for the curried tuna? Where's the recipe for the egg sandwich? Where's that recipe for that pizza that I eat every day?" So that's what led to Flour, Too.

You graduated from Harvard with a degree in mathematics. Are you a stickler for exact measurements in recipes?

Pretty much, yeah. As a baker, I'm really accustomed to measuring and weighing everything and timing everything. When I started embarking on testing recipes for this book, I would come and meet my chefs with my ruler, timer, pad of paper, my tablespoon measurer and my scale. They were like, "What are you doing?" And they're right. You can't really measure exactly how much salt for a batch of soup because there are so many variables. I tried to measure out approximately to give people a starting point, and then with each of the recipes, I say, "Season to taste." It's not really something you can do with pastry. You can't really make a cake and then say, "Oh, I think it needs a little bit less sugar."

Did you create the adult Valentine's Day cookies just to embarrass your employees?

They probably think so. We were doing sweetheart cookies, and I think we just thought, "Oh how funny," 'cause you're writing, "Love me, kiss me, I love you." Inevitably, someone's going to write something that's X-rated. And we just thought, well, we think it's funny—I wonder if customers would think it's funny. I think customers get a kick out of it. And we definitely do, too. It's pretty funny to be standing there in your professional environment and writing all of these words that you would never say out loud to your boss.

Drink of the Moment

RUM FOR IT

NAME: RumBa Runner

PRICE: $14

INVENTOR: Brandt Johnson, bars manager for InterContinental Boston

INGREDIENTS: Bacardi Gold, blackberry brandy, Crème de Banana, falernum, fresh orange juice.

INSPIRATION: "It's very close to the original recipe [for a rum runner]," Johnson says. "It's very Caribbean. The addition of the falernum gives it that tiki taste."

FLAVOR: The model of a tropical drink, its flavors are fruity, sweet and blunt. Any hint of alcohol is buried in a whorl of juice, banana and blackberry, while the falernum lends a narrow edge of almond. Order this on a sunny day with a view of the water, or on a humid night when your heart is 20 latitudinal degrees south.

BACKDROP: RumBa, which has just expanded to offer 112 seats and a second bar. By the end of May, there'll be new patio seating, so a peaceful, waterfront cocktail bar in Boston is no longer a pipe dream. "Summertime, being in the Financial District," Johnson says, "there's a very high demand for outdoor seating."

CONTEXT: The bar pours 79 different rums, including varieties from Austria and Thailand. "It's a tribute to Boston's history with the rum industry." Local products include bottles from Ryan & Wood, Berkshire Mountain Distillers, Triple Eight and Bully Boy.

PAIR IT WITH: Fried whole belly clams or garlic scallops. Or the bar's new Barbados fish tacos.

ALTERNATE CHOICES: The mojito is the bar's best-seller. "All the different flavors: raspberry, pineapple." Caipirinhas clock into second place. And the Pain Killer—rum, coconut, pineapple and orange juices, nutmeg—remains a standby. "And a lot of people are now ordering rums neat or on the rocks."

GOIN' STRONG

TO THE TWO SNAKES WHO THOUGHT THEY WERE GOING TO BRING BOSTON DOWN: I visited the Marathon memorial today on Boylston Street, and it was overwhelming. We cannot lose sight of the wonderful caring people in our world. The site is a credit to the human spirit. Boston Strong.

Beantown bound

To many of the people who send in Impersonals: Really, people? Give me a break. Quit complaining about ridiculous things, and appreciate how good you have it. Remember, there are people all over the world who do not have access to clean water, to enough food, to reasonable health care. There are countries where bombs go off daily, where women aren't remotely treated as equals, where people work for $37 a month for the privilege of slaving in a factory that will soon collapse. So really, before you start harping on how someone is dressed or the look on a kid's face as they ride a unicycle or too many people saying "Bless you!" when someone sneezes, count how many ways your life is lucky and great and do something nice for someone.

Grateful for problems

To the rude lady getting off the Orange Line at Back Bay station: It's after work and it's crowded. There is no need for your classless behavior when you scream, "Can you let us get off first please?" I'm absolutely letting you get off the train since I would not want to be stuck in the same car as you anyway. However, I cannot help it that you were slow and by the time you were exiting it looked like everyone getting off had already done so. Next time don't yell about something that's your fault.

Versatile Style

WHO Erin Fucigna, Cass Taylor and Jess Rosenthal, marketing mavens at Boston's Arnold Worldwide and founders of style website Five Days Five Ways.

WHAT The idea is to build different outfits around one item of clothing that's worn daily for a week. There are themes, too, like white-shirt face-offs. "Right now, we're just having fun, and hoping to inspire people to be creative and participate," Fucigna says. "It's challenged us to be more diverse and take more risks with our styling." Hence the posts on using a scarf as, say, a necklace, shirt, skirt and headband. They've even recently started collaborating with clothing line M.M. LAFLEUR.

WEAR For statement pieces and staples alike, the 5x5 girls recommend heading to Louis Boston, Salmagundi, Bodega and Lord & Taylor (but only when there's a sale). For summer, Taylor has her eye on overalls and jumpers, Fucigna's currently coveting high-waisted patterned pants and shorts, and Rosenthal's shopping list includes white high-top Converse Chuck Taylors. They recommend finding a point of inspiration when getting dressed. "Imagine one day you're the naughty librarian, the next day you're the hippy chick," Taylor advises. From there, flex your creative muscle by layering pieces to make the look your own (and give your wallet a well-deserved break).

An ice cream truck is hardly novel. It's the original food truck, after all, but until Batch rolled onto the scene earlier this month, the concept hadn't been picking up much momentum. Founders/churners Susie Parish and Veronica Janssens say they're in it for the fun, and also to increase by-the-scoop availability of their beloved salted caramel and other flavors, which are sold mostly by the pint at New England markets. The truck doesn't make regular daily stops yet, but it does have a full schedule of appearances at local summer festivals. Check Batch's website for updates— and between truck appearances, pop into Fort Point's new Bee's Knees Supply Co., which offers Batch by the pint and by the scoop.

Coming Up Rosés

Not so long ago, any self-respecting wine geek would have been terrified to be caught drinking rosé in public. Nowadays it's become a badge of honor, especially in spring and summer, when the first instinct of many a wine lover is to think pink. And why not? Rosés are magically versatile with food. The French, who, it is rumored, know a thing or two about wine, actually consume more copious quantities of rosés than of whites.

To be sure, there's an ocean of boring rosé in circulation, but the great thing about the category is that even the finest examples are moderately priced, flavorful and very refreshing. Like everything else we love about spring, rosé is casual. You can enjoy it outdoors when the sun's shining too brightly to crack open almost any red wine, and you don't have to worry about the vintage (the younger the better). The following blind-tasting champs are all dry and highly quaffable.

M. CHAPOUTIER CÔTES-DU-RHÔNE ROSÉ, BELLERUCHE, RHÔNE VALLEY, 2012

($12, BAUER WINES AND SPIRITS)

Pale in color, this is a cherry-scented rosé crafted by biodynamic wine guru Michel Chapoutier, whom some consider to be the Rhône's most accomplished producer. Its aromas are subtle, with appetizing green herb and earthy notes. Strikingly crisp with a mineral stoniness, this is a "serious" slightly peppery rosé ideal for Mediterranean fare. It's not what you'd describe as very fruity, but the herb-accented red cherry fruit is authentic and lingering.

CHARLES & CHARLES ROSÉ, COLUMBIA VALLEY, 2012

($13, SOCIAL WINES)

From Washington state, this syrah-based salmon-colored wine is brilliantly tart and vibrant. Yes, the U.S. can play, too! Bone-dry and lively with herbal spice accents and a lingering edginess, Charles & Charles is an ideal accompaniment for grilled fish. Any dish with tomatoes would be delicious. The 2012 vintage was something special in the Northwest, and this wine's multi-dimensional personality reflects the extra ripeness achieved during the growing season.

CELLER DE CAPÇANES, MAS DONÍS ROSAT, MONTSANT, 2012

($13, 570 MARKET)

Montsant is a mountainous zone in Catalonia where stony slate soils produce concentrated red wines from one of my favorite unsung grapes, garnacha. This highly perfumed rosé also incorporates a bit of merlot and cabernet sauvignon into the blend. Impeccably balanced, it features a whiff of rhubarb, earthy, wild red berries and a long mineral spice finish. Dry and fresh, it's delicious with a goat cheese salad garnished with ripe tomatoes.

ARTAZURI ROSADO, NAVARRA, 2012

($10.99, MARTY'S FINE WINES)

Navarra is another hilly Spanish region with wines that deserve greater recognition. Located just a bit north of Rioja toward the French border, it's been producing wine since Roman times. The highly regarded Artazuri estate specializes in concentrated garnacha-based reds, and this rosé is made from younger grapes. Bright pink in color, it has a charming floral strawberry aroma, with crisp, citrusy notes reflective of the chalky limestone subsoils. Very bright, very fun to drink, ideal with grilled shrimp.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Beauty

Face Time

Even your skin needs personal training to get it in shape. Enter Skoah, a skin-care company that offers anything but the traditional spa trappings. "There's no whale music, no bubbling cherubs and no pretentiousness," says co-owner Pete Dziedzic. Now the Vancouver-based firm is expanding from its sole U.S. base in the South End to a new location on Newbury Street.

Skoah's skin-care workout starts with a consultation to determine what your epidermis needs most. Then there's a facial that includes cleansing, toning, exfoliation, skin analysis and the application of a treatment mask, serums and moisturizers. It's boot camp, sans cardio. "Our skin-care workouts are relaxing, blissful and sweat-free," Dziedzic says. You leave the session with a personalized care regimen, along with hand-selected products and instructions on at-home use, which is much easier to maintain than that weekly spin class you keep conveniently forgetting.

If dermatological personal training isn't your thing, Skoah stocks more than 60 products for face, hair and body. The Skrubbin' Face Wash, Hydradew Mask and Gold Serum are all designed to give you a workout glow, even if your gym membership expired.

STRAIGHT FROM THE LIP

Essays from the author of The Family Man and My Latest Grievance

IF A SCRUNCHED-UP RUG representing Elinor Lipman were to unroll, out might pop Dorothy Parker, and perhaps Bart Simpson. Lipman can inject wit into anything and move a sentence, in her sly, deadpan way, to a laugh. "My mother, a dainty and impeccable woman, happily married to my father, a slob."

In "Confessions of a Blurb Slut," she describes the many subtle zigzags—blending tact, admiration and jealousy—involved in being a novelist asked to blurb others' novels, or requesting blurbs for her own. Another essay details the 19-year road that led Helen Hunt to adapt Lipman's novel, Then She Found Me, into a movie, sparking a mutual-fan relationship. Lipman's charming son Ben said to Helen: "I hope you know you made my mother's decade."

In "A Fine Nomance," she semi-ruefully embarks on a "training date" as a widow and explores online courtships. And what to name your fictional characters? A lot of texture and chronology goes into that. If writing about 1925, "I'm going for Gladys, Ida, Hazel." Then there's Lipman's shameless love of soap operas over the ages (1939–present), and the story of conveying the facts of life to Ben, who comically is more-fallopian-tube-than-thou on the subject. ***

"Perhaps I live in an overly frank family. My husband has an expression that I call 'evaluative.' His features rearrange themselves into something that is part squint, part frown, a look I've seen on the faces of judges at the Westminster Dog Show. Occasionally, he undergoes a moment of delicacy before blurting out what the offence is, but most often he diagnoses and prescribes without much soul-searching. My son will say, 'Ma, you're not planning to wear those pants outside the house are you?' Not now, I won't."

SOUND'S WAVES

Family getaways at the Villas by the Sea at Water's Edge Resort & Spa in Connecticut

ROOMS WITH A VIEW Long Island Sound is never out of the picture.

IN THE CURRENT GUSH OF Gatsbyism, it's natural to imbue Long Island Sound with a monetary glamour, a gilded chic that suggests it's less a commercial waterway than a bathtub for yachts. West Egg may have been laid on the far shore, but from the vantage of the Water's Edge Resort & Spa in Westbrook, Conn., the Sound does, indeed, feel like a backyard pool. Or it would if there weren't an actual pool directly below your balcony, just to the right of the private beach.

Gracious, polished and very accurately named, Water's Edge is the sort of whitewashed coastal playground that exerts a magnetic pull on wedding parties and tennis enthusiasts. Breakfast buffets are hearty, lawns and hydrangeas are in military trim and the bellhop is kept hopping. The main hotel has the slightly weathered feel of having seen many thousands of graduation dinners, but all the south-facing windows are filled with the ruffled blues of the Sound, so the vistas are impeccable. As are the newly built Villas by the Sea, a collection of luxurious family-friendly rooms directly on the shore.

These two-bedroom suites are misnamed as villas, but they're unquestionably spacious, modern and relentlessly tasteful. A legion of stonemasons and tile fitters must've been worked to a lather just to craft the accents. Entering one of the suites, you're faced with a Carrara marble kitchen island so big it could've yielded the Trevi Fountain. There's a Viking stove, a heavy-duty toaster and drawerfuls of professional cutlery. Best, the cleaning staff visits daily so you needn't ever unload the dishwasher. The open kitchen leads into a living room with a gas fireplace, custom furniture and a remarkable view of the Sound—you will remark on it—framing three rocky islets flecked with gulls.

This tastefulness continues in the two bedrooms, which are decorated in a coastal palette: sandy yellows, saltwater blue, whitecap foam. The crowning glory of the suite, however, is the master bathroom. A deep,

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

The nearby town of Essex has a picturebook Main Street with colonial taverns and twee boutiques.

It's a short hop from here to Uncasville and the delights of Mohegan Sun, or to Mystic and its seaport and famous pizzas.

JUST COASTING The Water's Edge is aptly named.

Kohler air-bubble tub sports multiple settings for eventful soaks, while the shower's horizontal sprays are tactically positioned for cleaning off the residues of the beach.

Which is really the reason for the two-hour drive. Stroll a few yards down the garden path to claim a deck chair on the sand, which is amply loaded with shells for young naturalists. The waves aren't usually aggressive, and the guppy-sized beach is tended and docile. But the rosy sunrise before breakfast or the sky's layers of amaranth at the cocktail hour make this a happy place for quiet reflection.

Quiet reflection is rarely on a child's itinerary, so the resort has generous distractions. An indoor pool is accessible, oddly, through the gift shop, while the tennis courts merit the adjective "championship." An old-fashioned amusement arcade, complete with skee ball and malfunctioning coin-op video games, is good for a half-hour's giddiness. There are organized summer activities, too, like scavenger hunts and capture the flag. But even hyperactive kids will likely calm themselves long enough to take advantage of the resort's mealtimes.

The Seaview Bistro serves well-priced pub fare like duck confit flatbread and a perfectly valid steak frites, along with a kids' menu starring the expected cheesy repertory. It's informal, dimly clubby and often jammed with the spillover drinkers from hotel functions. More ambitious by far is the Restaurant at Water's Edge, the formal dining room. From a window table, you can watch the colors deepen on the water as you wait for your seared tuna. If in season, try the mildly sweet lobster and corn chowder. Regardless of the time of year, though, linger over dessert and the last streaks of light. Then cross the lawn back to your bedroom, an open balcony door and the lull of the nighttime Sound. ***

MEATY MATTERS The menu is dominated by beef dishes, such as the braised cheeks, but the mushroom cavatelli is a standout.

EVEN WITH TWO SUCCESSFUL restaurants under his belt, Dorchester lounge/nightclub dbar and Back Bay fine-dining establishment Deuxave, chef/owner Chris Coombs had doubts that he could reverse the curse that had befallen Banq and Ginger Park. Both were ambitious businesses that seemed done in by the cavernous, rarely filled property at the corner of Union Park and Washington streets in the South End. And the space was the largest Coombs had taken on, with 110 seats in the dining room. He needn't have worried. A thorough makeover removed the gorgeous undulating wood ceilings, which had made the restaurant feel both yawningly large and claustrophobic. It's now partitioned into separate areas for the bar, the dining room and wine storage, creating a feel that's at once comfortable and casual.

The menu is similarly welcoming, showing a range that will appeal to a wide spectrum of diners. Take the wild-mushroom cavatelli ($26)—although it's the only vegetarian entrée offered, it's also one of the restaurant's best dishes. A large bowl of rolled ricotta cavatelli was tossed with earthy forest mushrooms, peppery arugula and Parmesan and topped with a poached egg. In less-skilled hands, all this cheese and yolk could've rendered the dish overly rich and one-dimensional, but the result was rounded and nuanced. An equatorial iceberg salad ($10) was equally delicious. Vegetables might be an afterthought at a traditional steakhouse, but this starter, a cross-section of a head of iceberg lettuce flecked with blue cheese, house-cured bacon, herbs and roasted walnuts, was spectacular and sizable enough to make it the focus of a meal.

The most interesting section of the menu, however, is the one entitled "rarely celebrated," an ode to offal. Don't pass up the beef tongue ($11). Brined, braised and grilled, it smelled like sweet smoke and was served with house-made pickles and ravigote, a bright-green herb-saturated vinegar sauce. Sliced so thin as to resemble translucent parchment, it was the Frenchified offal version of pastrami. The machaca-braised beef cheeks ($9) were also enjoyable. Served with pickled vegetables, chips and small tortillas, the braised dried beef was both chewy and soft with a smoky flavor. Its only drawback was its small portion.

BY DESIGN The South End space has been transformed.

While the most memorable dishes on the menu are the peripheral ones, the prime steaks are appealing for both their execution and their reasonable price. The gold standard for steak is USDA Prime, a designation given to only two percent of beef in the U.S. As in the case of Kobe, many high-end restaurants that claim to serve prime actually don't (for example, the now shuttered KO Prime didn't serve it, despite its name). That Coombs is able to serve a meltingly tender 14-ounce prime rib-eye for less than $40 is a deal. And the chance to have a dinner of prime beef for less than $25 is a welcome change from the exorbitant, lesser-quality meals available at more formal restaurants in town. An unexpected bonus of ordering one of the less luxurious cuts like the hanger ($25), flat-iron ($24) and skirt ($25) is the house steak sauce you can request. Sweet, smoky, loaded with Asian spices and boasting a cinnamon finish, the sauce is deliciously complex and pairs well with the meat's simple cast-iron grilled preparation. Done medium-rare as requested, the flavorful prime rib-eye ($39) didn't need the sauce; the striations of fat provided their own built-in seasoning. The only misstep was when a flat-iron steak ordered medium-rare came out practically mooing.

B.N.'s Picks

Wild-mushroom cavatelli

Beef tongue

Beef cheeks

Prime rib-eye

Service was smooth and attentive, with waitstaff comfortably answering questions about different cuts and options. Cocktails also upheld a high standard, especially in the case of the Old Town ($13), a version of an Old-Fashioned that was infused with a skewered fig and notes of black walnut. All of which makes a strong case that Boston Chops represents a new breed of steak-house, one that acknowledges that meat alone won't cut it in this competitive market. ✖✖✖

METAL OF HONOR

For the Iron Man series, the third time's the charm.

Iron Man 3 ★★★☆
Starring Robert Downey Jr., Gwyneth Paltrow, Don Cheadle, Guy Pearce, Rebecca Hall and Ben Kingsley. Screenplay by Drew Pearce and Shane Black. Directed by Shane Black. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

EVERY CRITIC I KNOW SUFFERS from spells of existential despair during summer blockbuster season. It's not just that the procession of pictures based on comic books, theme park rides and children's toys becomes numbing. It does, but this is also the time of year when nobody lets us do our jobs. Hundreds of millions of dollars are on the line with these expensive tentpole properties, so the last thing panicked executives want is a trusted opinion interfering with their marketing juggernaut. For us, it's three long months of publicist lies and unanswered e-mails, culminating in absurd conversations, like the one in which I was informed that the readers of this magazine aren't important enough to merit a timely review of the new Star Trek movie.

Take Iron Man 3, which opened earlier this month to a bazillion-dollar box office haul, and was predictably shielded from local critics until a scant 48 hours before it opened to the public. A rather pointless token gesture, since I don't think many in the record-breaking audience needed to hear what critics had to say before making up their mind about seeing Iron Man 3. Opting to spare myself from crummy projection and those grope-y, TSA-styled searches Disney demands at its press screenings, I just waited two days and headed to my favorite suburban multiplex in Woburn to kick off the summer season with a civilian crowd.

Surprisingly, it's actually a good movie, and at times, it's even very good. Iron Man 3 is a rare case where the formulaic demands of a threequel are leavened by genuine wit and a very specific authorial signature. The credit belongs to co-writer and director Shane Black, who all but invented the wisecracking buddy comedy some 20-odd years ago with his gloriously profane screenplays for Lethal Weapon and The Last Boy Scout. Black has been MIA since 2005's Kiss Kiss Bang Bang, a raucously funny film noir sendup that revived the career of Robert Downey Jr., who was considered unemployable at the time because he kept landing in jail.

Faced with the awkward position of making both a sequel to a movie nobody liked (Iron Man 2) and one that everybody loved (The Avengers), Black and Downey split the difference and just made Iron Man 3 a sort of sequel to Kiss Kiss Bang Bang instead. Our swaggering Rat Pack superhero finds himself rattled by panic attacks after battling aliens in New York City last summer, and now an ethnically indeterminate terrorist calling himself the Mandarin (Ben Kingsley) has started blowing up civilian targets with a newfangled bomb technology that stumps even weapons expert Tony Stark.

It's a ripping little detective yarn, occasionally punctuated with the obligatory soulless special effects sequences required by the genre. "I'm just a man in a can," Stark sighs to lady love Pepper Potts (a game Gwyneth Paltrow), and the secret to Iron Man 3's success is keeping Downey out of that can for as much of the movie as possible. The wonderful middle hour of the movie trashes Stark's tech support and armored outfits, stranding him in Podunk, Tennessee, with nothing to rely on except his wits and a precocious child sidekick played by Ty Simpkins.

The way Black and Downey handle the potentially groan-worthy inclusion of this li'l moppet is indicative of their irreverent approach. Stark's a total jerk to the kid, blithely mouthing off as he would to anyone his own age, treating him like an equal even though he's still in elementary school. It's a fresh spin that scores some of the film's biggest laughs, with lines that only a charming bastard like Downey could get away with.

The Mandarin's true motivations are revealed in a mid-movie twist that only a monster would spoil, but suffice it to say there's some snarky political satire peeking around the margins of this movie. In response to this terrorist threat, the government has given Don Cheadle's War Machine a new red-white-and-blue coat of paint, renaming him "Iron Patriot" because that plays better with focus groups.

Of course, at the end of the day Iron Man 3 is still a comic book blockbuster and thus needs to end with a patience-trying half-hour or so of flying, computer-generated robot suits fighting fire-breathing super-villains while blowing up a whole bunch of crap. But the smirky, sardonic sensibility smuggled in by Shane Black is almost enough to cure the summertime blues. ✖✖✖

MOOD CHANGER

Devendra Banhart
plays the Wilbur Theatre on June 7.

DEVENDRA BANHART'S music can prove deceiving on the surface, and the name of his latest album follows suit. One might presume Mala refers to the Spanish word for "bad," particularly since the enigmatic singer/songwriter grew up in Venezuela and occasionally sings in that language. But "mala" spins differently across the globe, and for the album title's inspiration Banhart cites a Serbian term of endearment that roughly translates to "sweetie pie."

"I chose the word because it's ubiquitous in so many different languages," Banhart, 31, says. "Same word, but with different meanings. I like its malleability."

The same goes for the music that Banhart has made since emerging a decade ago as a leading figure on California's unfortunately labeled "freak-folk" scene. He sported a wavy mane and bell-bottoms in those days, an image that many people remember. "'Oh yeah, you're that guy that has this song about a child and has long hair and no shirt,'" Banhart recalls hearing. "You're anointed that caricature. But that's neither here nor there, and certainly not a concern of mine."

His concern has been to follow the whims of his work. That's both as a musician—thrilled that his new label Nonesuch is home to many of his cross-stylistic heroes, including Caetano Veloso, David Byrne, Philip Glass and Ali Farka Touré—and a noted visual artist who inks his own surrealistic album covers.

"I don't really make art to express myself," Banhart says. "I'm not interested in being understood. I'm interested in understanding. My work is not about 'Here I am, trying to explain something to you.' My work is 'Here I am, trying to explore this thing called music or art.'"

After two impressionistic albums on which he expanded his sonic palette with indulgent surges (including lurching psych-rock on 2009's What Will We Be), Banhart stripped back for the moodily playful Mala, released in March. He says he envisioned making minimalist, almost incidental piano music with fewer lyrical metaphors. "It's a transitional album because my process is in transition," says the singer, who played most of the instruments with co-producer Noah Georgeson in his former home in Los Angeles. Mala bridges solo acoustic guitar and synthetic pop. Lead track "Golden Girls" closes with an ominous mantra of "Get on the dance floor." And even when beats bubble up, a dark, sober tone pervades the album, while Banhart's sly humor lends subtle contrast. "I have a lot of humor in my work, but it's just not very funny," he says. "That's very important, because I take my work seriously, but I don't take myself seriously."

Banhart gets frisky in the Spanish ballad "Mi Negrita," the synthesizer-steeped "Für Hildegard von Bingen" (where a sainted nun spins videos) and "Your Fine Petting Duck," a romance-dashing duet with his fiancée, Serbian photographer/designer Ana Kras. "The idea was to do this '60s bikini/bubblegum pop call-and-response," he says. "Typically, those songs are 'Take me back, baby.' This is where the guy's reminding her, 'Thanks, but I'm a terrible person.'" When the tune revs into electro-pop, they also sing in German. "You can have a lot of fun, a particular freedom, singing in German—or Spanish," he says.

Other odd sounds creep into Mala, including birds outside the L.A. home studio where he and Georgeson worked. "We soundproofed the place ourselves, and we didn't do a perfect job," he says. "Those bird tracks were slowed down about eight octaves, and it sounds like synths. A lot of seemingly digital sounds are actually organic."

"Taurobolium" also processes the sounds of a switchblade, chains and glass within snapping rhythm textures that underscore its "I can't keep myself from evil" chant. "We should evoke that impending danger," Banhart says. "I write out production notes, and [ideas] kind of orbit around the lyrics."

Now he's taken his songs on the road with Georgeson on guitar, Josiah Steinbrick on keyboards and guitar, Rodrigo Amarante on piano, guitar and oboe, Todd Dahlhoff on bass and the Strokes' Fabrizio Moretti on drums. They play on June 7 at the Wilbur Theatre. "I'm very fortunate to surround myself with people who actually know how to play music," Banhart says, "so I can just work on my chicken dance." ✖✖✖

IVORY TOWERS

A return to old-fashioned book learnin'

MY WIFE, HEATHER, IS in nursing school. She's constantly studying. In hopes of contributing to the noble pursuit of knowledge, I sometimes volunteer to assist in her academics. For instance, when she was studying a diagram of a dissected cat torso, I posed like a glassy-eyed dissected cat while she pointed to my esophagus, larynx and other upper-body anatomy that has cat-human commonality. It was all going well until I succumbed to the urge to suddenly leap forward and yell, "Pet cemetery!" Nurses should be prepared for surprises.

The recent proliferation of textbooks throughout the house set off a bout of nostalgia for the academic life. I'll admit that I miss the book learnin'. Good thing, then, that people like me with a hunger for knowledge can find a 24-hour buffet of brain food with MIT's OpenCourseWare. Spend some time eating virtual lunch at MIT's cafeteria of erudition and you, too, might learn to devise strained food-related metaphors.

With more than 2,000 courses, the first challenge is deciding where to start. I contemplate a course entitled "Comedy," but that turns out to be less "ha ha" comedy than "everybody doesn't die at the end" comedy. In other words, like New Girl.

A course called "Media in Transition" sounded interesting but wasn't formatted for my laser-disc player. And while I'm glad that there's a course on air-traffic control, I'd prefer that my air-traffic controllers possess a diploma that they didn't make themselves with construction paper and macaroni.

Ultimately, I decide to check out a course from the Sloan School of Management. A few of my friends have MBAs, and from what I can tell, a typical MBA program includes two years of wearing critter pants before becoming a boss and making tons of dough. I really think I could've been an MBA. So it's time to find out, with a course called "Power and Negotiation."

I won't lie and pretend that I finished the entire course, although lying is certainly a viable component of negotiation. You just call it "bluffing." I learned that from my "Power and Negotiation" lectures. Or did I? Tell me now or this deal is off!

After breezing through a few "Power and Negotiation" lectures, I learn that the "Do you know who my father is?" genre of threats is called "referent power." One's BATNA—best alternative to a negotiated agreement—can confer power. And "active listening" is when you sort of parrot information back at the person who's talking. Oh, you've heard of active listening? Great, great. Glad to hear that you're familiar with active listening.

Now that I'm an MIT-trained negotiator, I know that I should consider the relationship with the other party. If it doesn't matter, you can be more of a dick. Like when I haggled over a Mountain Hardwear jacket at a market in China, I shouldn't have cared what that woman thought about me. And anyway, my BATNA was awesome—plenty of other jackets in China, lady. As it turned out, after the back-and-forth resulted in a deal, she called after me, "You come back! Bring whole family!" It's possible that I could've negotiated a better price on the jacket.

If only I'd had access to OpenCourseWare back then, I'd have known that you've got your substantive issues—the hard numbers of a deal—and your relationship issues. I suspect that some MIT students might have a hard time navigating the latter realm. You know you have some eggheads on board when the professor feels the need to define what emotions are. Per the lecture notes: "Emotions are thought-feelings. Changing the thoughts or cognitive framing of a situation changes the associated emotions." Class, your homework is to listen to Extreme's "More Than Words," which I promise will cause you to experience some serious thought-feelings.

I don't want to bore you with all my newfound "Power and Negotiation" knowledge, but here are a couple more tips: "Going to the balcony" can be an important negotiation technique. So can "building a golden bridge." But you shouldn't worry about "break-dancing on the tightrope" or "tripping the yak," because those are things I just made up.

The most important negotiating technique, though, is... give me $100 and I'll tell you. No? OK, $50. Fine, I'll pay you $10, but I'm not cleaning your apartment unless you admit I'm the better negotiator. You do admit it? Deal. I totally feel like Good Will Hunting right now.

Now that everyone knows I'm an MIT student, I'm feeling the crushing pressure of expectations. Yes, I'm brilliant. But sometimes I just want to be a kid, you know? I want to play some beer pong and hang out on the quad and forget, for a few minutes, that I have a 99.9th percentile IQ. Because at the end of the day, a diploma's just a piece of paper. Especially once the macaroni falls off. ×××

Soroff On CAMERON RUSSELL

The model and TED talk star speaks out on body image, DNA and her biggest beauty secret.

MODEL CAMERON RUSSELL, 25, WAS RAISED IN CAMBRIDGE AND graduated from the Commonwealth School. Her mother, Robin Chase, founded Zipcar. By modeling, Cameron put herself through Columbia University, where she majored in economics and political science. She's appeared in fashion magazines from Vogue to Elle to W, her print campaigns include Louis Vuitton, Armani and Yves Saint Laurent, and she's walked the runway for Chanel, Prada and Victoria's Secret. Last year, she gave a speech entitled "Looks Aren't Everything; Believe Me, I'm a Model" at TEDx. Her project Big Bad Lab aims to foment grassroots political and social change through interactive media and public art. She lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Ever feel conflicted about making money off of an industry about which you've expressed a lot of reservations?
Cameron Russell: Modeling has been a really fantastic gift for me. I paid to go to Columbia by modeling, and if I hadn't, I'd have $100,000 in student debt. I consider myself lucky.

Has your outspokenness affected your career?
Not at all. When my TED talk came out online, a bunch of clients I work with all the time called and said, "That was fantastic." Models called me and said I was voicing things they felt. I think fashion sometimes likes to be a site for critical debate and discussion. It can be, and that's why, for instance, there are a lot of really powerful images from the '90s, exploring gender and sexuality.

Some say that modeling is all about rejection.
It is about rejection, in a way, but it's a type of rejection that's completely superficial, because it's based on stuff that you have no control over. If someone doesn't want to hire me because of how big or small my boobs are, or how big or small my waist is, I can't get upset about it. It's superficial, and who cares?

Isn't that soul-crushing, though?
When you first do the shows in Milan or Paris, you go to something ridiculous like 200 castings, and it's devastating the first time around that you hear, "They don't want to use you." You want to know why. And then the next season, the people who used you don't want you, and the ones who didn't do.

So you learn quickly how capricious it all is?
Yes. I think you realize pretty early on that your success relies on something that's all surface. I didn't earn this success. I was just born this way. And by the same token, if it ends, it's not my fault, for the same reason. It's actually kind of nice, because in this business, rejection and failure have nothing to do with what kind of person you are, or how smart or well-educated.

You've said that you "won the DNA lottery." What do you say to someone who didn't?
It's totally unfair. It sucks that our society is built this way. I launched a magazine called Interrupt, and we got so many submissions that addressed body image. That's something that people often dismiss as a ridiculous thing girls talk about in the bathroom. But the reason that we're obsessed with how we look is that employers and teachers and potential spouses are all responding to those signals.

So is beauty really in the eye of the beholder?
Sure. If you know anybody really well, it doesn't matter what they look like. It doesn't make you a better or worse mother or friend. It won't affect anything real. Once you know someone, it's meaningless.

So what's your best feature?
I'd have to say my mind.

Is the Big Bad Lab more fulfilling to you than modeling?
Oh, yeah. The Big Bad Lab and Interrupt mag is sort of the luxury I get to have from being a model.

Your mom wasn't very into fashion?
No. My mom has an enormous appreciation of textiles, and our house was always full of beautiful fabrics brought by foreign house guests. She grew up in the Middle East, so she had a lot of beautiful galebayas, and now she wears shalwar kameez, which is pretty much the uniform for women over the age of 35 in Cambridge. So she has a strong sense of style.

How do you feel about women who absorb their self-image from fashion spreads?
Well, the way mass media defines "perfect" people is heavily skewed. In the 2007 runway shows, less than 4 percent of the models were non-white. Then there's the age factor. The message is that older women can't be attractive, which is absurd.

Anything you refuse to do on a shoot?
I try not to wear fur, but you just stick up for yourself on the job, and they either don't put it in the shoot or find someone else to wear it. I don't do nudity, either.

Do you describe yourself as a feminist?
For sure. All it means is that you believe in equality.

Biggest force shaping our idea of beauty?
Probably history. Look at our legacy of racism and the much smaller number of black models.

Are guys too intimidated to ask you out?
Hmm. I have a boyfriend, so I don't really care.

Best part of the job?
If you had asked me this a month or two ago, I would have said the money, which gives you freedom and safety to some extent. But today, I'd say that it also gives you access to media. I realize now that using the word "model" is like "Open Sesame." It's the secret button to get on a TV show or be heard somehow.

So after you quit modeling, are you going to become a ninja-cardiothoracic-surgeon-poet?
Oh, that takes years of practice. You have to go to medical school and a sensei, so I don't think so. I'm really interested in politics at the grassroots level. I'm interested in igniting alternative power structures. I think the two most pressing issues facing us are campaign finance reform and global warming.

Biggest beauty secret?
Sleep.

Diet and exercise?
Nothing too crazy. Largely, it's genetic. My grandmother and I weigh the same and are the same height. But I'm healthy. I go to yoga, I run, I ride my bike around the city. ✖✖✖

Four local designers swim against the current

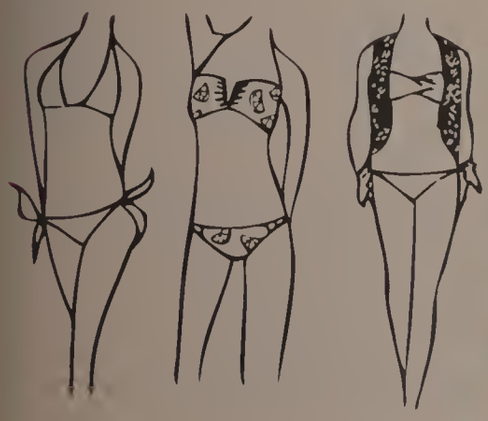
BY JACQUELINE HOUTON



PHOTOGRAPHED BY SIMON SIMARD

IT'S LATE APRIL, OFFICIALLY MORE THAN A MONTH INTO SPRING, AND DANIELA CORTE IS FEELING A CHILL.

"I'm in a turtleneck today. I stopped pretending it's spring because I'm always freezing," says the Argentinian-born designer. Her 2014 swim and resort line—a collection of graphic, color-blocked suits and coverups that transition from swimming pool to swank party—will arrive at her Newbury Street studio in a matter of days, rock the runways of Miami's Swim Week in July and hit shelves at Corte's boutique next year. "I love Boston. I'm married to a Bostonian. This is now home for me; this is where I gave birth to both my children," Corte says. "But having said that, it is a challenge. Things have been easier in places with warmer climates because people expose their skin more."

Karla Medina seconds that sentiment. "A lot of people tell me, 'Karla, what are you doing? It's Boston!'" says the local designer behind KMswimwear. You might agree that the idea of a Boston-based swimwear line seems nearly as incongruous as that of a furrier in Waikiki. Why attempt to build a brand of skin-baring styles in a town with a buttoned-up rep and a climate that ranges from meh to ugh eight months of the year?

But you could also argue that—thanks to our Puritan streak—the Bay State has played a fateful role in the history of modern swimwear. In 1907, Aussie professional swimmer and vaudeville star Annette Kellerman was arrested at Revere Beach and charged with indecent exposure. Her crime: having dared to don a fitted one-piece suit that

KARINA BRESNAHAN SWIMWEAR

bared her neck, arms and knees instead of the bulky bathing costume of the day (picture a dress worn over long bloomers). "I can't swim wearing more stuff than you hang on a clothesline," she argued to the enraptured press. The judge ultimately agreed, and all the publicity helped popularize one-piece styles. It also raised the profile of Kellerman, who went on to star on the silver screen and launch her own line of bathing suits. In the ensuing years, new fabrics emerged, hemlines receded—and by 1946, we'd arrived at the bikini, a cut so shocking that its creator named it after the atoll that witnessed the first atomic bomb test.

Today swimwear is a $13 billion market, one that a handful of local designers have attempted to infiltrate. They have varied reasons for practicing their craft in an environment that could well be described as inclement, literally and figuratively. But most are immigrants from Latin American countries where the beach is a social nexus and swimwear is a wardrobe staple. Self-taught Medina has always been drawn to the water. "I love the ocean. In Miami, all my friends can tell you, I always have a bikini in my purse," she says. "If I drive by and I see the ocean, I jump in, get wet and go back in the car." Now an avid scuba diver, Medina says the beach provided the primary outlet for fun while she was growing up in Cuba. She also trained on the swim team at an intensive sports school. "I hated—hated!—wearing the same suit as everybody else," she says. After immigrating to the U.S. in 1997 at age 13, Medina was amazed by the range of colors and prices and soon started buying swimsuits left and right. But she still had trouble finding a perfect fit. "I always had to buy a different top, a different bottom—buy two and combine them—and even then I didn't have the right support," she recalls. So Medina started altering the suits herself. The idea of turning her hobby into a business came during a getaway to an island resort, where she was struck by the sea of nearly identical suits. If she could create unique, flattering suits for herself, why not do it for others?

Back in Boston, she received a sewing machine from a family member and got to Googling, teaching herself to sew with online tutorials. Before long, she was attending board meetings at her health care job by day and model fittings by night. "It was a very eclectic mix," Medina admits with a laugh. Now she's focusing full time on the line, putting sexy twists on a simple aesthetic. "I don't like going with crazy patterns because I love how bikinis fit women naturally. I love curves. When you don't have too much, it features the body that much more," she says. So Medina usually sticks to a palette of one or two solid colors, but she plays with shape and often adds an unexpected detail—a chain accent, a strategic flash of flesh. "You have the back covered, you have your front covered, but on the side you have a gap where you can see the skin," she says of her favorite design to date. "It's not too much, but it stands out quite a bit."

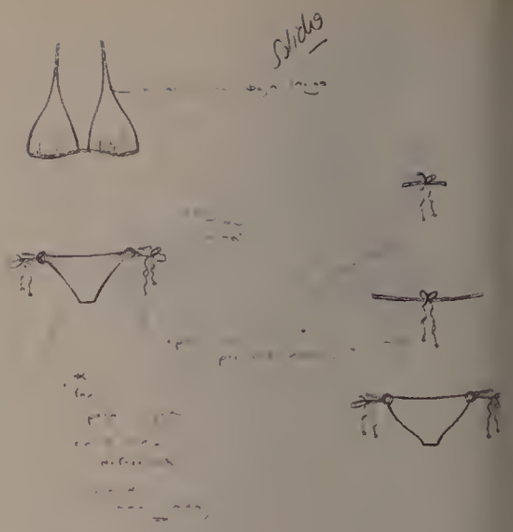
Corte, too, knows plenty about standing out, having landed her work in Sports Illustrated's Swimsuit Edition each of the past three years. After founding her eponymous ready-to-wear line in 2000, for years she designed swimwear for VIP customers by request before creating her first full collection of swim and resort wear in 2010. "I just started realizing that swim was a market that wasn't really well penetrated," Corte says, pointing to the dearth of options on racks in January and February, when her clients might be traveling to warmer climes. When she opened her Newbury Street shop in the fall of 2011, she decided to offer swimwear year-round. "I grew up in Argentina and I spent a lot of time on the beach, so for me it was kind of a dream to be able to go back and fully design a swim collection and make it part of our business," she says.

Her 2013 collection, titled Sueños ("Dreams"), was inspired by memories of her native country, where Corte manufactures her designs and visits every year. "When we were growing up, they had these marshmallows in pastel colors and meringues in all pastel colors, too. When we were there early in the morning getting breakfast, we saw this beautiful bakery and these beautiful pastel colors," Corte explains. "And we thought, wouldn't this be great for a collection? And it was kind of a dream, so that's why we called it Sueños." She paired the confectionery hues with tassel details, riffing on the fringe trend and offering a counterpoint to the saturated colors and bold prints of her 2012 swim collection, Fruit Salad. As usual, she prioritized practicality, offering tops and bottoms that can be mixed and matched and convertible pieces that keep tan lines at bay. "You have the strap to be able to run after your kids if you want, but then when you lie down, you should be able to take that off and still look fantastic." Fabric choice is also key—especially when it comes to pastels. "I always found it very frustrating to find this beautiful suit, and then you'd get in the water and it'd be completely see-through. So that was always a challenge, to make them look very sexy but have the support, have the coverage."



That balance between style and substance is also at front of mind for Newton-based designer Sinesia Karol, who grew up in Brazil wearing her mother's handmade clothes and dreaming of a career in fashion. She put those goals on hold to raise her four children, but now her eponymous swimwear line is available at Bergdorf Goodman and Newbury Street stalwart Serenella. Launched last year, it features silky fabrics, subtle embellishments, and a relaxed yet sophisticated feel, with artfully twisted bikinis and one-shoulder styles as well as less revealing options. "When I was designing this line, I was thinking about how so many women, once they hit 30, feel that they can't wear two-pieces anymore or the bathing suit needs to be a black, boring one-piece," Karol says. "I wanted to created something that all of us can wear and feel beautiful in."

Hence one of her favorite designs to date, the One Retro Maillot, which Karol describes as "really sexy but very conservative." It's adorned with one of the line's original prints, a key part of her vision. "I wanted to create a line of swimsuits that was sophisticated and unusual, to mix art and fashion, to create the perfect prints," Karol explains. Drawing inspiration from the flora of her native country, she teamed up with Brazilian artist Ana Paula Castro to design the prints for her debut Orchid Collection, adorned with specimens like the dune-dwelling Guttata and the late-blooming Velutina. "I wanted to design a collection that symbolizes the exotic nature of Brazilian women," Karol says. "They are casual and fun but also stylish and sophisticated like the women of Boston."

Karol plans to launch her second collection, Brazilian Birds, in June in New York, and she has trade and trunk shows in Miami and Houston on her itinerary, too. Medina is fresh off a photo shoot and planning for the debut of her forthcoming UC Collection in Miami; trips to Atlanta, Vegas, and Tampa are in her sights as well. And Corte has been gaining national traction—see January's Esquire, where Hayden Panettiere posed in her Punta Bustier bikini. By comparison, Karina Bresnahan is still just starting out. Yet the 2010 School of Fashion Design grad has already gotten some impressive exposure. In 2011, Karina Bresnahan Swimwear was featured in the Launch, a showcase for new designers at Boston Fashion Week. The next year, Bresnahan presented a solo show, clinching one of the 10 coveted spots in the Tent with a collection designed for a laid-back surfer girl, full of colorful prints and flowing maxi cover-ups. "It was pretty weird; I'm still working 45 hours waitressing and trying to sell the whole collection myself," Bresnahan says of the BFW whirlwind. "It got a little crazy, but I loved it."

Now she's at work on her next collection. "My 'woman' in mind for this collection, versus my previous, is a little more sophisticated, much, much more romantic. Glamorous and a little mysterious, yet still down to earth in an all-natural way," Bresnahan notes. "I've sourced some great knits and sheer chiffons lately. Totally feeling bright and pastel watercolors and tie dyes. I've been focusing on purples and oranges, sunset colors that are warm and comforting." She also hopes to ramp up into retail mode, to secure some local boutiques as stockists and eventually own her own boutique. Currently, she's sewing all the suits herself. "That's probably the most frustrating thing, when people approach me and they're like, 'I want to order a bunch of those for my boutique,' and I'm like, 'Oh, I can't sew 300,'" Bresnahan says. "My biggest challenge right now is getting my product out there. Boston doesn't have a large demand for swim or resortwear."

New England sensibilities can be a hurdle, too. "The biggest challenge is I think that smaller suits accentuate the body better," Corte says. "I grew up in South America, where the suits are really tiny, especially for the American market. So I am turning on my clients to actually go for smaller bottoms instead of these humongous, humongous bottoms. That's one of the challenges, but I love to take that up," she says with a laugh. "It's a fun market to be in."

And as for our surly climate? "That's a little bit of a challenge, that people don't expose their skin so much," Corte admits. "But then you have the other Bostonians who are travelers and want to look fantastic all year round. There's a little bit of everything." Karol even thinks those long New England winters help her focus. "The winter in Massachusetts helps me tremendously because I'm always thinking about the next warm place that I'm going to," she says. Bresnahan isn't limited by latitude either: "I've become really inspired by exotic paradises. Googling images and scouting where I would go and what I would do for a monthlong vacation has been my motive lately. I usually have a tab open with images of 'magical places in the world.'"

"That's probably the most frustrating thing, when people approach me and they're like, 'I want to order a bunch of those for my boutique,' and I'm like, 'Oh, I can't sew 300.'"

Travel to warmer fashion hubs for trade, trunk, and fashion shows may be essential, but these swimwear designers seem determined to make a go of it right here.

"I do go to Miami quite often. My main market is in Miami, where you wear a bikini every day if you can. It's a challenge to be in Boston, but I love Boston and don't want to be anywhere else," Medina says. "I love having people from different parts of the country... different body types, different cultures, all of that. I love the city. If I had all the money in the world, I'd end up here in Boston." ×××

Surf's Up

Designer and Vogue entertainment editor Jill Demling now lives in New York, but her heart belongs to Boston. "I'm a Masshole. I definitely annoy a lot of New Yorkers with my overly enthusiastic cheering," says Demling, who grew up in Weston glued to games featuring "the best starting five in NBA history." She's still a die-hard fan, catching every Celtics game against New York and Brooklyn, plus home games during her frequent visits with family here. Now her swim and surfwear line, Pret-à-Surf, is making its Boston debut: The Revere Hotel just became its first local retailer, and Pret-à-Surf's Spring/Summer 2013 collection is serving as the uniform for staff at the brand-new Rooftop @ Revere.

The line is the brainchild of Demling and co-founder Karen Mulligan, studio manager and agent for famed photog Annie Leibovitz. Best friends for more than a decade, the pair first dreamed up the idea for Pret-à-Surf during the summer of 2009—which got off to a decidedly inauspicious start. "I had broken my foot during the summer, and she [Mulligan] had Lyme disease, so we were pretty miserable," Demling recalls. To make up for their bummer of a summer, they began planning a December trip to Costa Rica. Mulligan, an avid surfer, was in the market for a new board to bring along. "We were looking at the selection—or the lack of selection—in surf wear at the surf shop in Montauk and got pretty annoyed that surf companies think that all women are fine with very logoed-out, neon rash guards with tons of psychedelic flowers," Demling says. "So we came home kind of frustrated and just started talking about how we wished we could design our own line."

Their first collection debuted in spring 2010, modernizing vintage cuts and prints from the '40s and '50s with high-performance fabrics and high-fashion flair. Soon Pret-à-Surf gained fans—Christina Ricci and Emma Stone among them—and stockists in New York, Beverly Hills, London and Tokyo. Now Boston joins the list. "Our Spring/Summer 2013 line had such a New England feel to it: the navy and red and white, the gingham stripes," Demling says. "It's the first time we did a little dress with ruffles and some more outerwear pieces that could easily be combined with the swimwear pieces. It really was a line that was very versatile, so it [the Revere collaboration] made complete sense."

Opened on May 19, the Rooftop @ Revere is serving up cocktails, bites, and lounge chairs and cabanas with skyline views and easy access to the indoor pool, plus some surprise specials (prosecco popsicles, anyone?). For Demling, it's an ideal environment for introducing her line to Boston. The hotel is just a stone's throw from her old stomping grounds—Demling's mother owned a clothing store in Downtown Crossing—and the new rooftop lounge's vibe suits her beach-to-street line. "Everyone wants to have the feel of the beach in the city... Even if it's just for a couple of hours, everyone wants to pretend, to get the vibe of relaxing and having a cocktail in a beach chair," Demling says. "And that can be anywhere. It's kind of a mindset, less of a physical place. It seemed like a perfect idea."

Lacting Out

BUTTERFAT EFFECT

YOU'D EXPECT THIS from a city with a runaway per capita ice cream consumption. It's the return of the Scooper Bowl, the Jimmy Fund's 31st annual all-you-can-eat ice cream extravaganza at City Hall Plaza.

Ben & Jerry's, Breyers, Baskin-Robbins and other leading lactose slingers will be on hand, dishing out delicacies, including frozen yogurt and sorbet, in more than 35 different flavors. For the vanilla crowd there's opportunity to behave in character. More curious samplers can dig their spoons into Banana Bread Pudding or White Russian. Originally featuring only four vendors, the Scooper Bowl is now a three-day fair that serves more than 20 tons of ice cream to an estimated 60,000 visitors. The lactose-tolerant hordes descend on City Hall Plaza from June 4 to 6.

Performing Arts

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

Spice Up Your Life

From Such Great Heights A lottery ticket carries even more potential for life change when you're growing up in New York City's Washington Heights. Winner of four 2008 Tony Awards, as well as a Grammy for Best Musical Show Album, In the Heights focuses on the struggles of a close-knit Latin neighborhood and the mystery behind a scratch ticket that could alter the community forever. The play tells the story of Usnavi (who is named after the first thing his parents saw upon arriving in America: a U.S. Navy ship) and friends as they work their way through lost scholarships, failing businesses and star-crossed love. Originally conceived by then college sophomore Lin-Manuel Miranda, In the Heights combines Latin flavor, hip-hop and rap with the quirky world of musical theater. Sing, salsa and sway your way to the Boston Center for the Arts' Calderwood Pavilion through June 16.

Glory Daze

Summer's on the horizon, so it's high time to return to seasonally appropriate cult classic Dazed and Confused. Set on the last day of school in 1976, the coming-of-age comedy features early appearances from a number of future stars—like Matthew McConaughey, Milla Jovovich and Ben Affleck—who contribute to the cast of stock high school tropes: the pseudo-intellectual kids, the perennial stoner, the sensitive quarterback and the 20-something guy with a taste for teenage girls. After a booze-drenched night with lessons on sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, the crew rides off in search of Aerosmith tickets. School is out on May 27 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (In the suburbs.)

The Angels' Share ★★★ Ken Loach is not known for his sense of humor. He puts out marvelous movies year after year that I never want to watch more than once. Always full of despondence and desolation, they're typically filmed in Glasgow, where the accents are so thick that the movies arrive here with subtitles even though they're ostensibly in English. (I can't make out a word of them.) Loach's universe is one of small-time crooks, photographed in an artless vacuum of staid camera placement and ugly backgrounds. But The Angels' Share is different. It might be the first Loach movie you could call "jaunty." That stupid Proclaimers song that was such a ubiquitous earworm during the 1990s plays here more than once during wacky comedic montages, and then again at the end. While I would normally walk 500 miles just to get away from the tune, it kind of works here. It's Glaswegian miserablism with a fairy-tale Ocean's Eleven twist. I guess at age 76, Loach decided he had to lighten up at some point. (At Kendall Square.)

The Company You Keep ★★ ½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former member of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Disconnect ★ One of those deadly serious "everybody is connected" parables that were all the rage about 10 years ago, this magnificently misguided effort tells three interlocking stories of lives ruined by Wi-Fi. Pitched somewhere near the somber worst-case scenarios of a driver's education training film, it's Reefer Madness with smartphones. The title is more of a command: Unplug your modem or certain doom lies in wait. Early on, it becomes impossible not to imagine screenwriter Andrew Stern as Grandpa Simpson, waving his cane and telling all you kids to get your damn Twitter off his lawn. Lord knows, online bullying and child exploitation are serious problems, and obviously our era of connectivity has left us vulnerable to cybercrimes. But the film's incessant alarmist tone is laughably unconvincing. For most sane, well-adjusted folks, using the Internet is just a fact of life, not a cause for garment-rending hysteria. Millions of people meet and communicate online every day; it's really not the end of the world, dude. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Frances Ha ★★★ There's probably no way to talk about writer/director Noah Baumbach's sixth theatrical feature without bringing up Lena Dunham's Girls, as both traverse the uncomfortable sexual exploits and financial free fall of a 20-something gal trying to make it in New York City. The TV show I am most tired of arguing about, Girls is a love-it-or-hate-it proposition (I happen to love it), and your tolerance for Frances Ha will probably be proportional to your patience for another flighty, emotionally bruised heroine making bad decisions while trying to stave off adulthood. Shot in shimmering black and white and loaded with references to the 1960s French New Wave, Frances Ha is sunnier and not nearly as icky as Girls. (Adam Driver appears in both, but he's way less creepy here.) Star Greta Gerwig (who co-wrote the film) plays Frances, an adorably graceless wannabe ballerina who feels abandoned as all her friends settle down into boring marriages and grown-up careers. Gerwig is a real movie star, handily carrying the familiar material. (At Kendall Square.)

G.I. Joe: Retaliation ★★ It's a few cuts above 2009's unwatchable G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra, and maybe the best movie anybody could make based on a cartoon that only existed to push Hasbro toys back in the 1980s. I'm not sure if that's damning with faint praise or just exhausted resignation. Dwayne Johnson gives another one of his endearing, overly sincere performances as the leader of an elite military squad suddenly under attack when a shape-shifting supervillain passes himself off as the president (Jonathan Pryce) and starts dropping bombs. There's also some stuff about ninjas. Dancer-turned-director Jon M. Chu, of Step Up sequel fame, at least keeps the tone agreeably stupid and the action easy to follow. Pryce hams it up with riffs on birther paranoia, but the most unintentionally amusing flourish is Bruce Willis' glorified cameo as a retired general turned survivalist gun nut. To call Willis' performance phoned-in would imply that he could be bothered to dial a phone. He looks disgusted that this movie even exists, and he's not alone. (In the suburbs.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Midnight's Children ★★ ½ Salman Rushdie's 1981 novel goes heavy duty on the allegories for some 500 pages, using the history of India as a template for an excessively complicated family drama spanning generations. This unwieldy film adaptation, co-scripted by the author, tries to cram it all into one movie, with results that are odd, endearing and ultimately exhausting. We have a character who can summon magical conclaves from within his oversized nose, and what comes after is a wacky, harebrained farce in which everybody has a lost love or a mistress. The over-complicated overlapping of who is still in love with who becomes so daunting, I didn't want to take notes so much as draw a flowchart. Meanwhile, this is all supposed to represent India and Pakistan, so wars keep breaking out. For about an hour, this is all terribly amusing. But there is nothing to hang onto here; most scenes last only two or three minutes, and events don't accrue so much as they just pig-pile on top of one another. (At Kendall Square.)

No ★★★ ½ Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer a TV-ad campaign for a referendum vote that just might kick Chile's brutal dictator Augusto Pinochet out of office. While idealists in the various political parties think the airtime should be used to expose Pinochet's atrocities, Bernal's boy wonder sells democracy as a product like any other—with rainbows, jingles, silly comedy sketches and even a mime. No's most cutting gag is just how much these political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good because the people casting votes are generally stupid. (At Somerville.)

Olympus Has Fallen ★ ½ The second worst Die Hard movie of the year finds Gerard Butler playing a disgraced Secret Service agent who becomes our country's last hope after some nasty North Korean terrorists blow up most of Washington D.C. and hold the president (Aaron Eckhart) hostage in the White House bunker. A deliberate throwback to junky mid-'90s thrillers such as Air Force One and Executive Decision, Olympus Has Fallen severely misjudges the cheese-to-violence ratio, with Training Day director Antoine Fuqua lavishing his attention on innocents shredded by machine gun fire, cold-blooded executions and women being brutalized. It's hard to surrender to such a preposterous, cornball potboiler when your face is constantly rubbed in human suffering. Somebody also apparently miscalculated the budget, as this is the cheapest-looking movie in theaters right now. Bargain-basement CGI effects induce unintentional laughter, while the second half of the film is Gerard Butler skulking through dimly lit hallways. There are a lot of solemn patriotic platitudes, and Butler sticks his knife in people's skulls. Isn't crap like this supposed to be fun? (In the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper co-stars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Reluctant Fundamentalist ★★ ½ Harvard-educated Mira Nair is best known for culture-clash dramas about assimilation, such as The Namesake or Mississippi Masala. So the gritty espionage-film trappings of her new adaptation of Mohsin Hamid's novel may throw you for a loop at first. We've got abductions and more than one shadowy CIA agent. None of these genre elements are handled particularly well at the start, but give the movie a half-hour and you'll settle into a typically thoughtful Nair tale of a young Pakistani (Riz Ahmed) with his heart set on making it as a Wall Street master of the universe. (He even lands a rich, white girlfriend played by Kate Hudson.) But 9/11 changes everything, and he's soon profiled and bullied clear out of town and into radical Islam. Cleverly and unsubtly equating the inhuman practices of financial robber barons with extremist terrorists, the movie is more interesting than good. A maudlin musical score and ham-fisted dialogue detract from some incendiary ideas. (At Kendall Square.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (In the suburbs.)

Something in the Air ★★★ ½ In 1968, Paris was rocked with demonstrations as politically ravenous students rallied against injustices much bigger than the changes in the terms of service on their Facebook accounts. Writer/director Olivier Assayas' blatantly autobiographical Something in the Air picks up about three years later, with teenage Gilles (Clément Métayer) and friends graffiti-bombing their high school and donning motorcycle helmets to scuffle with police. Like David Chase's Not Fade Away, which also elliptically dealt with tumultuous times, it's a film about how youthful passions dissolve. The day-to-day business of living so often saps us of our resolve that even the most ardent convictions wither away over time. Revolutionaries become paper-pushers in an office somewhere and old friends lose touch, so Something in the Air doesn't so much build to a climax as it simply melts away. Gilles was never a dynamic character to begin with, but he recedes further as the film carries on, drifting into obscurity and often crowded out by supporting players who similarly flare and then vanish. (Available via Video On Demand.)

Trance ★ ½ This film is just more short-attention-span theater from director Danny Boyle, who, as usual, spends so much energy spinning the camera and whirling around to techno music there's no time to notice the story he's telling is bunk. Egregiously stupid, even by the standard of trashy heist thrillers, Trance stars James McAvoy as a smarmy auction house employee who lifts a $25 million Goya painting and then bonks his head and forgets where he left it. That's right, amnesia. He's in deep with a gang of shady crooks led by Vincent Cassel, who of course decides that all the young lad needs is some hypnotherapy. Enter Rosario Dawson, va-va-vooming it up as one of the least credible mental-health professionals we've seen onscreen in a while. She hypnotizes him (let's face it, Rosario Dawson hypnotizes everybody), and the screenplay begins to contort itself into one asinine, outlandish development after another. By the time pubic-hair grooming becomes an actual key plot point, you'll wonder if all involved have also suffered head injuries. (In the suburbs.)

Newsworthy Noise

Chances are that dogs won't be the only ones chasing these paperboys down the street. Hailing from Nashville, Tenn., the guys who form Paper Route undertake their songwriting in a run-down plantation house. Sounding like a cross between Passion Pit and Jack's Mannequin, they're fast approaching indie-rock powerhouse status, buoyed by pop-culture appearances on the soundtrack for (500) Days of Summer and on episodes of the CW's One Tree Hill. The trio makes its own headlines on May 26 at T.T. the Bear's Place.

An Artful Education

First Class

In his years of teaching art in the Boston public school system, Ari Hauben has often seen students filling in blank canvases, as well as filling in the blanks on standardized tests. Hauben, who's a multimedia artist, encourages his students to strive for higher than government-mandated education standards. Having taught for nine years at a school that specializes in aiding students with behavioral issues, he knows all about the system's limitations and frustrations, but also about the students' sense of hope. These two feelings cross in Above the Standard, his latest multimedia exhibition, in which he uses traditional school supplies—from desks to No. 2 pencils—to question definitions of success in the classroom and society. Learn something new through June 1 at the Boiler Room Gallery.

Love at First Sight

Walking out of a salon in paper flip-flops isn't exactly how you want to run into the woman who stole your husband 20 years ago. Daphne Kalotay's third novel, Sight Reading, focuses on a love triangle composed of three musicians, Nicholas, his first wife, Hazel, and his second wife, Remy. A classic story of love, pain and sheet music, Sight Reading doesn't miss a beat. Tune in at the Harvard Book Store on May 28 and Newtonville Books on May 29.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com]* Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

IMAGINE THAT

He Doesn't Take Requests

The ballroom looked like it was filled with bubbles, and the champagne most certainly was, when Triangle held its Imagine gala at the Renaissance Waterfront Hotel.

The organization, which creates opportunities for the disabled, marked its 42nd anniversary by honoring the inimitable Karen Bressler, the aptly named Joan Jolley, restaurateurs Jack and Lisa Urbaczewski, and financial titan Richard St. Jean Jr. There to fete them were such eminences as emcee Jonathan Elias, TV Diner smoothie Billy Costa, fashion designer Denise Hajjar, the improbably handsome Evan Kushner, debonair restaurateur Matt Burns, the flawless Bracha Horovitz, blonde bombshell Donna DeFillipo, and assorted and sundry others.

The only hitch in an otherwise flawless evening (and an indication of how much fun it was) was the fact that they temporarily ran out of red wine, which prompted one guest to say, "Well, our water glasses are full. Let's get Jesus in here."

Getting Down to Brass Tacks

The Commonwealth Shakespeare Company set the way-back machine to Las Vegas, April 27, 1961, with the Shakespeare in Sin City gala, held at the Mandarin Oriental.

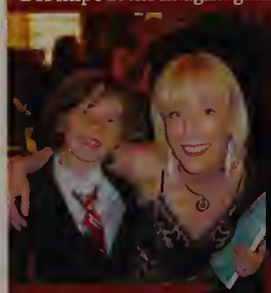
Re-creating the opening night of the Flamingo Casino, the dress code was Rat Pack chic, and the showgirls wore feathered outfits that would've been banned in Boston during the Kennedy administration.

The cocktails flowed like cocktails should, followed by dinner and dancing and a whole lotta carrying on. Among the misbehaved: handsome Red Cross honcho Jarrett Barrios, the aptly named Jay Cashman and the stunning Christy, mayoral hopeful Mike Ross, brunette babe Jeryl Oristaglio, the comme il faut Priscilla Douglas, absurdly gorgeous couple Katie Greenberg and Onnie Mayshak, hedge fund hottie Dennis Hong and his handsome other half, Thomas Hagan, the criminally blue-eyed Rob Gravis and dashing John Milligan, scratch golfer Kier McDonough and his blonde moll, Anja Kola, and everyone else in this town who really knows how to throw down.

Simply put: You know it's a good party when the guy on crutches is still on the dance floor for the last song.



The evening's funniest remark, from a socialite whose friend was trying to fix her up: "OK, so how tall is he when he stands on his wallet?"

Till Divorce Do Us Part

Who knew helping end homelessness could involve eating and drinking to excess?

Margaret Brady, Joan Jolley, Denise Hajjar and Donna DeFillipo at the Imagine gala

Gabriel Epstein and Karen Bressler at the Imagine gala

Katie Greenberg and Onnie Mayshak at Commonwealth Shakespeare's gala

Edward Garmey, John Milligan, Sam Mazzarelli and Justin Reis at Commonwealth Shakespeare's gala

Backstage at Beyond Shelter

Sean William Donovan at Beyond Shelter

Mike and Liz Fish at Horsing Around at the Ritz

Keith Lockhart, Coryn and Babak Bina and Emiley Lockhart at Horsing Around at the Ritz

Beyond Shelter, the Friends of Boston's Homeless annual hootenanny (which the Improper proudly sponsored), was held at the House of Blues, and some of the best restaurants in the city had tables serving up amazing little nibbles. The crowd included 92.5 FM The River's Rita Cary (who graciously hosted with yours truly), such celebrated chefs as the ever affable Gordon Hamersley, Dorchester homey Chris Douglass and Sausage Guy Dave Littlefield, and local worthies like über-activist John Rosenthal, adorable siblings Quinn and Ian Kaemmer, statuesque brunette Abby Elizabeth Cushman, ubiquitous socialite Tonya Chen Mezrich, force of nature Mindy d'Arbeloff, the madcap duo of Lynne and Gary Smith, and roving magician Darren Yong, who wowed the crowd with masterful acts of illusion, including one that involved a giant pink foam penis.

"OK, so how tall is he when he stands on his wallet?"

Overheard by the bar:

"You might meet your future ex-wife this evening."

"With my luck, I'll bump into my current ex-wife."

Whoa, Nelly

Because mint juleps are mandatory on Derby Day, the third annual Horsing Around at the Ritz gala to benefit Bina Farm got off to a rollicking start.

Even people who never drink hard liquor had at least a sip of bourbon (and a few of us quite a bit more). The hats and horses theme was fully embraced by a crowd that included hosts Coryn and Babak Bina (whose namesake farm serves families with disabilities), Pops maestro Keith Lockhart and the flawless Emiley, philanthropist Patty Ribakoff accompanied by her daughter, Corky, the unfairly perfect Liz and Mike Fish, Wellesley stunner Harris Krupp and her handsome husband, Paul, co-chair Elizabeth Figueroa, emcee Joyce Kulhawik, party pair Dan and Penny Fireman, and what seemed like 600 others (but was probably less because I was seeing double by the end of the evening).

A mac-'n'-cheese-'n'-grits-ball hors d'oeuvre was a bit of overkill, but it was an otherwise flawless affair. The funniest remark came from the man who was discussing his boyfriend and said: "We conquered IKEA; I think we can get through anything." ✖✖✖

Kill Your Pandas

Adam DeTour

On Nantucket a few weeks ago, we stopped at American Seasons, a restaurant that forgoes the island's seadoggedness for farmhouse chic—bare wood, folksy wall art and a calculating eye for pigs. I ordered duck breast, its layers of crackle and cream giving it a confectionary texture, its flesh like marzipan. But it was an attendant duck sausage—a distillate of animal more intense than confit, than demi-glace, than even bacon—that made me put down my fork. Swirling a dose of Napa cabernet around my tongue, my heart gave a little flip of elation that, thank Darwin, our species staked out the most pleasurable link on the food chain.

The New Yorker's Adam Gopnik once noted that food writing falls into two categories: the "mystical microcosmic" that looks for spiritual meaning in a dinner (see paragraph above; my book Beef, available on Amazon), and the "mock epic" that comically inflates the act of eating into the grandiose (my book Empires of Food, available on Amazon). Either way, the key to food writing, like the key to all writing, is to peel away anything false, leaving a raw, green truth, just like a panda stripping a piece of bamboo. The panda is your judgment, while the stripped bark is the dumb panda simile you should have cut from the last sentence.

Of course, since 99 percent of all food writing occurs on Internet threads, its overarching purpose is consumer advice. Which includes recipes, like the ones in this issue for summer dishes and the condiments that love them. So while you can ponder a sausage's cultural framework, its semiotics or its role in Freud, most people agree it's more interesting to eat it.

RESTAURANTS BY THE NUMBERS

GET WITH THE PROGRAM

MATTHEW GRACE, CTO, OBJECTIVE LOGISTICS

THE EUREKA MOMENT, FOR some inventors, takes hard work. Tech entrepreneur Philip Beauregard had to put in time waiting tables before going to the Wharton School and mulling the arcana of microeconomics, twiddling here and there with behavioral science and game dynamics. Then the idea crystalized. "We aim to fix bad service," says Beauregard.

Along with programmer Matthew Grace (pictured on page 17), Beauregard founded Objective Logistics, a Leather District-based software company that intends to revolutionize the service industry. They developed a product called Muse that's now being used in restaurants such as Five Napkin Burger and Not Your Average Joe's, but that will soon inhabit the systems of more sprawling chains. Its function is ingeniously simple. "The punchline is Moneyball for restaurant employees," Beauregard says. "Waiters are the biggest sales force on earth. Why is there no leaderboard technology?" Muse ranks servers by average billings and tips, so employees compare their performances. Top performers are rewarded with their choice of shifts, while point-of-sale data tracks progress and tells servers ways they could improve—for instance, by pushing more desserts. There's shame and jealousy at play, of course, and the monetary reward of more lucrative shifts, but the system is completely transparent. It creates a true meritocracy in quesadilla sales.

"It took us 1½ years to get it right," says Grace, who did boots-on-the-ground research as a waiter, programming code all day before tying on an apron and timing his visits to his tables. Beauregard says that Muse is so simple, a 5-year-old could use it, and that he sees it sweeping past the hospitality industry into call centers, hospitals and schools. The upshot, he says, is that "restaurants are a mini-vacation. You want to see your water glass full and that your server is affable. Companies that don't focus on customer experience will lose."

Starch Struck

Good news for South End carb fiends: The neighborhood now has not one but two sources for starchy Puerto Rican favorite trifongo. First came Vejigantes, opened last summer. And at the new Maná Escondido Café, the dish consists of fried green and ripe plantains and boiled cassava, which are mashed together, enriched with butter, and seasoned with gobs of fresh garlic. Inside and out you'll find your protein of choice, which should definitely be shrimp or pork—either the pernil (roasted shoulder) or fattier, crispier chicharrón (fried pork rinds). But meat-free diners need not shy away; there's a vegetable filling, too.

REGIS & REISER REV UP

HE CALLS HER "BOSTON'S most-famous, least-famous chef." After eight years of working together, she calls him "Chef Reiser." Now, Susan Regis (Biba, Pignoli, UpStairs on the Square) and Matt Reiser (former wine director at UpStairs on the Square) are teaming up to open their own restaurant.

Don't expect fine dining, or anything conventional. A coffee house by day and a wine bar by night, R&R (the project's working name) will be "a kind of communal space" featuring a wine school "with an apprentice-type program," Reiser says, and probably a small retail outlet for wine. Cooking lessons, yoga classes and "lots of places for people to plug in and do work as well as interact" are part of the plan, he adds. "There should be a way to utilize daytime space in restaurants besides serving food," Regis agrees. "It has to be unique."

As for the food, Reiser promises "pure, simple food and wine. A great bread program. Wood-grilled pizzas, grilled octopus, and the usual Susan sensibility done in an everyday, approachable fashion." Reiser says this will be "the place to go two or three times a week." And it will "hopefully" be located in Somerville, he adds. "Somerville has a lot going on right now," says Regis, who's lived in the city for years.

It will likely take a year and a half before R&R opens, they say. Meanwhile, investors are on board, and Regis will spend some time working at her sister's restaurant, Boulette's Larder in San Francisco, which will be undergoing a major expansion in July.

"I'm done doing it for others," Regis says. "It's time."

CAGED BIRD SINGS

Tucked away on Merrimac Street in the West End, the former Bulfinch Hotel quietly reopened as the Boxer just in time for Memorial Day weekend, almost exactly one year after being sold. Although the hotel's new name no longer reflects Boston's famed architect, the balance and simplicity that Charles Bulfinch strove for is captured in its renovated and renamed restaurant, Finch.

It's been a slow but steady move for the hotel, recapturing the history of the West End and instilling it in both the space and the menu. "We wanted to go down to the bones of the building, find what was great about it, and highlight that," says general manager Emily Antonelli. Thus, the extensive demolition began.

Tearing down the facades that had been constructed over generations allowed Finch to emulate the look of the original 1904 building—and revealed large windows, long hidden behind a wall.

In step with the modern vintage trend, Finch features a long, smooth bar and various sitting areas, each styled differently. The high-backed chairs arranged around chess and backgammon tables at the restaurant's entrance suggest whiskey sipping, while the booths tucked behind the bar and below a once-hidden window conjure both business meetings and intimate first dates.

The menu is simple with a few quirky twists. A balsamic chicken flatbread layers baby spinach, garlic, portabella mushroom, roasted red pepper, chicken and Gorgonzola atop Indian naan bread, all drizzled with a reduced balsamic glaze. For bar snacks, there's the kitchen sink kettle chips, Finch's take on Irish nachos, with the flash-fried chips tossed in hot sauce and garlic, then topped with blue and cheddar cheeses, balsamic glaze, ranch dressing and green and red bell pepper.

Cocktails complement the food's tangy accents, with the Dirty Bird martini (dirtied by a whiskey sour pickle and its brine) and Finch Garden (gin, rosemary syrup and dry vermouth garnished with candied carrot) using local products provided by Snap Top Market (and its owner, Improper Bostonian–featured bachelor Steve Napoli). Then there's the off-the-menu secret: soju served traditionally in a chilled teapot lined with cucumbers. It's straight Boston class, Antonelli says, adding: "It's about bringing the guest into the experience of the city."

HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

Q&A

SPEAKING UP

Comedian Gilbert Gottfried headlines a fundraising performance on June 8 at Malden High School's Jenkins Auditorium. Proceeds benefit the One Fund.

When it comes to a controversial joke, how soon is too soon?

I still haven't figured that one out. You know, there's that old saying that tragedy plus time equals comedy. And I always felt like, well, what office do they look at the calendar and go, "OK, June 7 we can start making a joke about it." It's kind of like how people make jokes about the Titanic now. Why is it OK now? It's like, screw them, that was years ago. We don't know them. Even people who act so shocked, it's like, whenever there's a tragedy, even before the Internet came out, there'd be about eight to 10 jokes that would come out immediately that everybody knew and everybody would exchange. You know, back then it used to be the watercooler; now it's the Internet. That hasn't changed. There's always jokes after tragedies.

What are people's reactions when they hear your natural voice, as opposed to the one you use while performing?

Well, they think they're talking to Bing Crosby, 'cause I'm also a fine singer. And I do beat my kids a lot.

Do you have to drink a lot of tea for your vocal chords?

I don't do anything, really. I should. I guess in another year or so I'll start sounding like Rod Stewart or something.

Why do you think you're often cast to do animal voices?

I do a lot of animals. Mainly, it's been birds. On Family Guy, I did the voice of a horse, so it shows that I'm branching out, and I'm a much more versatile actor than anyone had thought. Eventually, one day, I might do the voice of a pony. Several years ago, I was the voice of an ant in an insecticide commercial. And I sounded just like an ant. I lived with a family of ants for a year. I'm like De Niro.

Some of your jokes aren't exactly kid-friendly. Do your children ever get to listen to your material?

At their age, I only let them listen to The Aristocrats.

If you were to be roasted, what do you think fellow comedians would say about you?

Oh God, they'd have so much. Just the joy on their faces, ripping me to shreds. I'm sure there are people out there who'd like to literally roast me.

You're not only popular with the public, but looked up to by other comedians as well. What do you think really makes you stand out in your trade?

What makes me stand out from every other comedian is that other comedians are funny.

Mermaid Mania

Vampires with glittery skin are about to get tail-slapped by the latest mythical trend. Mermaids—once relegated to sailor tattoos and Disney products—are formally in fashion. Emerson alum Linden Wolbert is at the head of the school, having traded her legs for a 35-pound bedazzled silicone tail.

"You won't come to my house and see mermaids everywhere," says Wolbert, who moved to Los Angeles and founded Mermaids in Motion in 2005. "For me, it's a vessel and a tool for education."

In her guise as Mermaid Linden, Wolbert entertains at children's parties and celebrity events, traveling as far as the Caribbean and Central America. A trained and certified scuba and free diver, she can hold her breath for up to five minutes and swim to depths of 115 feet. Wolbert's propelled by her enthusiasm for the sea and (literally) by her various mermaid tails, which she designs and sells for as much as $20,000. It's a high price to pay for supernatural creature credibility, but Wolbert says it's worth it.

"The kids are the ones who make me a real mermaid," she says. "They believe I'm real. But otherwise, I'm a woman who has a passion for the ocean, and this is the best way I can find to share that."

WIGGED OUT

NAME: Blond Wig

PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: Blue Coat Gin, The Bitter Truth Apricot Liqueur, dry vermouth, lemon, powdered sugar on the rim

TASTE: Zestily citric with a slash of bitter. "That's why we use the powdered sugar," Boston Chops co-owner Brian Piccini says. "It helps cut the acid flavor." The Blue Coat's heavy juniper adds a floral note to the fruit.

PERSONAL HISTORY: "The whole idea of the drink is from my good friend Kate," Piccini says, referring to acclaimed sommelier Kate Moore. "She would put on a blond wig when we went out nightclubbing in Paris. We had a couple of gin-filled nights. It's completely personal. Her alter ego."

CONTEXT: Boston Chops' approach to cocktails, like its approach to grilled beef, is subtly iconoclastic. "We cut our meat slightly differently, club instead of strip," Piccini says. "And a lot of bone-in steaks." Likewise, their version of the Old Fashioned uses rye infused with figs and black walnuts. The Cosmo uses red wine instead of vodka.

SWEET NOTE: "Gin and sugar don't usually go together." The powdered sugar, too, is a reference to Moore's white-blond wig. "It's a little messy," admits Piccini.

PAIR IT WITH: Being an oenophile, Piccini wouldn't recommend matching this with any of the menu's major proteins. "I might order ceviche or some oysters."

SPIRIT: Madcap. "She was just wearing this blond wig, and we were going crazy in Paris," recalls Piccini. "We banged out a lot of cool cocktails."

Brighton just snagged a great catch in Brighton Fish Company, a fish market with a dead-simple philosophy: top-quality seafood at fair prices. The owners, brothers Andrew and Michael Bulger, are industry vets—Cape Cod kids who, between them, put in nearly two decades at a beloved seafood market in Orleans. Last month they sank their savings (and a loan from their parents) into a bright space on Chestnut Hill Avenue, stocking fish-counter staples such as salmon and swordfish. Specialty catches—red snapper and squid, for example—are available with a day's notice. We're already hooked.

Food for Thought

Growing Up

If anticipation whets the appetite, the first sun-ripened tomato from Higher Ground Farm should be mouth-watering. Set atop the Boston Design Center in an industrial stretch of Southie, the open-air rooftop farm is expected to be the second largest on the planet. It's a project years in the making. "We've been talking about it for so long, and now we're a couple of weeks away from realizing and actualizing this dream," says Courtney Hennessey, co-founder with her friend John Stoddard.

The two met at the University of Vermont as environmental studies majors, but the idea for Higher Ground Farm started taking root nearly five years ago when they were working at South End tapas emporium Toro. Stoddard, who was then pursuing his master's in Sustainable Food and Agriculture Policy at Tufts, did a sustainability audit on the restaurant for class. One of the resulting ideas was to add an onsite garden.

"As John and I got to talking, the idea of doing it on a larger scale became very appealing to us, in thinking about us trying to more broadly impact food production in the city of Boston," Hennessey says. They connected with Recover Green Roofs—a Somerville company that's created rooftop gardens and living walls for private residences, public schools and businesses such as [illegible]'s Ledge Kitchen and Drinks—and [illegible] funds and scouting locations. Last [illegible] settled on the 55,000-square-foot [illegible] Boston Design Center. "It met a lot of [illegible]," Hennessey says. "It's a large space, the building is structurally sound, the [illegible] super into it, so we were able to sign [illegible] last summer.

Since then, they've been working with engineering firm Simpson Gumpertz & Heger to finalize a design plan. "It took a lot of creative thinking outside the box of 'Well, just put this green roof up there, and it'll look like a regular farm,'" Hennessey says. Phase one involves 3,000 square feet of growing space using plant-filled milk crates, 2,400 of which are set to be installed the second week of June. The first crop will have salad greens like mustard and arugula, a rack's worth of herbs—basil, cilantro, parsley, lovage, mint—and plenty of tomatoes. "I think we ended up with eight or nine different tomato varieties, a couple of different heirlooms, including one called Japanese Black Trifele that I really love," Hennessey says. This season, the produce will be served at local restaurants—including Toro, Coppa, Tavern Road, Neptune Oyster and Sweet Cheeks—and sold at South Boston's American Provisions and at a weekly onsite farm stand.

"Our hope is that this is part of a growing sector within the city that is really looking at the importance of food production closer to where people live and using underutilized spaces," Hennessey says. Next year, she and Stoddard hope to expand to the full 30,000-square-foot growing capacity, offer CSA shares, establish a farmers' market presence and partner with the Boston Collaborative for Food and Fitness to bring produce to corner stores in Dorchester and Mattapan at a discount. Eventually, they'd also like to get public rooftop access for tours and classes on cooking, agriculture and green design. "It's such a beautiful space," Hennessey says. "And the views are unbelievable."

A CASE OF WHINE

TO THE "NON-COMPLAINER" IN THE SUMMER STYLE ISSUE: I applaud you for bringing to light all of the horrible things happening in the world. It's truly a shame that we live in a world that values iPhones and Facebook over an underdeveloped nation's need for decent health care. However, let's not forget the point of the Impersonals column. No one is going to vent about real problems! Furthermore, don't you think it's a little self-righteous of you to put everyone in their place? I find that sort of behavior just as ridiculous as the folks complaining about the jerks who stole their seat on the T. You can climb off from your high horse now.

Cool with complaints

To the woman in the bathroom at South Station: Thank you, thank you, thank you for telling me that my skirt was tucked into my underwear as I washed my hands. It was not a cute pair you'd want half the city to see, and who knows how far I would have made it before another stranger let me know.

Almost indecently exposed

To the worst restaurant I've ever dined in: Your appetizers were OK, but your entrees were despicable. How can you charge $33 for a plate of duck and have it be inedible? Or $34 for the scallops just to have them be disgusting? Also, how do you ruin scallops? I expected, after spending almost $200 at the restaurant, to leave at least somewhat satisfied. I don't understand how you are still in business since your "upscale" prices do not reflect the quality of your food. Instead of feeling full, I left feeling robbed.

INTO AFRICA

Paul Theroux's latest returns to familiar ground.

NOW 72, TRAVEL WRITER and novelist Paul Theroux has led a ferociously prolific life (46 books). On his latest journey, he goes to South Africa, Namibia and north to the "nightmare" of Angola. His prose rumbles with energy, matching the bravery and danger of his rugged travels over 2,500 miles.

Although he shadows a rich tourists' $4,000-per-day safari and hangs out with elephant trainers (one of whom is later stomped to death), it's on the gritty ground of the authentic Africa that he's most engaged. He still treats people with curiosity, greets perceived wisdom with skepticism and delivers deserved judgment. But his anger is primarily directed at overprivileged travelers and misdirected charity.

The Last Train to Zona Verde
By Paul Theroux

Theroux lives on Cape Cod.

Angola, with its oil and diamonds, suffers extreme poverty that he describes in an almost apocalyptic way: squalid housing, unemployment everywhere, wretched rusted cars symbolically clogging the landscape. Even "authentic" hunter-gatherers—though colorfully described—are just enacting a long-gone culture. Portuguese colonists traded slaves and later subjected Angolans to forced labor in the 1920s. Today, Chinese immigrants—some of whom are criminals working off their sentences—bring new dilemmas and discrepancies. Theroux's writing makes even the most disturbing atrocities fascinating. ×××

BLAZING SADDLES

NATURE CALLS Visitors to Santa Fe are met with both folk history and majestic, never-ending vistas.

THERE'S A SENSE, ALMOST upon arrival, that leaving Santa Fe will make your heart ache. Flat, dusty horizons broken by mesas, buttes, mountains and the crispest sky with lolling, plush clouds are matched by terra cotta–colored, pueblo-style buildings with equally striking turquoise accents around the windows and doors (for good luck). Offering the desert without desolation, Santa Fe, N.M., vibrates with understated allure and life.

Santa Fe is the quiet sister at a loud family dinner. She's accomplished in the arts, both culinary and visual. She rubs elbows with celebs on the regs—recently Johnny Depp with Lone Ranger—while somehow maintaining modesty. With strict building codes to ensure that new structures match what's been there for generations, Santa Fe imparts a warm, vintage, familiar feel.

A stay at Bishop's Lodge does the same. Sitting on 450 acres in the Tesuque Valley against the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, the lodge is a boutique experience that successfully masquerades as a luxury home. Some 160 years ago, Santa Fe's first archbishop, Jean Baptiste Lamy—whose life and career are immortalized in Willa Cather's Death Comes for the Archbishop—made the area home. The chapel he built still stands, the steeple just visible above the lodge's main office, beckoning visitors to sit in its small rooms and inhale palpable serenity.

The property features a heated pool, a hot tub, and a full spa and fitness center—though you won't need it. With miles of trails, Bishop's is not a place for lingering indoors. Its stables and beautiful, well-trained horses are made all the more attractive by stable manager and authentic Brooklyn cowboy Jeff Kennedy, whose tanned skin and blue eyes match the landscape. He and the handlers lead group rides in the morning and afternoon, as well as longer private excursions by request. Saddle up Pepe for a horse that provides an interactive ride (he needs motivation to keep pace). Put your trust in him as you climb steep hills that level off where summer sunsets are met by cowboy cookouts, complete with live music.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Visit the farmers' market in the Railyard District for freshly ground chile powders.

Don't miss the miracle staircase that stands without support at Loretto Chapel.

Scope out retired mining holes at Cerrillos Hills State Park.

A quick shuttle ride takes you to the not-to-be-missed Museum of International Folk Art (MOIFA). The permanent collection features more than 135,000 artifacts, and the long-term exhibition Multiple Visions: A Common Bond stuns with rows upon rows of toys, dioramas and other relics representing more than 100 nations.

Skip the tourist-trap stores downtown and go straight to the source: the merchants sitting under the portal of the Palace of the Governors. These artisans sell jewelry made and branded by their respective pueblos, offering pressed metals and turquoise from New Mexico mines.

A few blocks away is Todos Santos Chocolatier & Confectioner. Visiting this tiny store is like stepping into an edible version of the MOIFA, with beautiful confections covering every surface and (inedible) folk art dangling from the ceiling.

Work off the sugar rush with a Santa Fe Walkabouts tour of Bandelier National Monument by Georges Mally, a Parisian who runs the sightseeing company with his wife, Sue. He narrates the drive past the open-air opera house—with tuxedo and lobster-dinner tailgating—a camel-shaped rock, the black mesa that Georgia O'Keeffe painted and the hills that lead to nuclear powerhouse Los Alamos before ending up in Bandelier to hike the Tsankawi trail.

As Georges leads the mile-and-a-half loop, he shares the trail's history, revealing why the path is canal-like and why the rock appears white (hint: Volcanoes 600 times more powerful than Mount St. Helens erupted here). Pieces of pottery lie scattered across the plateau, an open museum of the stories-high pueblo that once stood there. After descending the second ladder, duck into the shade of a cave carved into the mesa-side on the right before taking in the petroglyphs and miles-wide vistas.

Cool off in a nearby ghost town named Madrid, where the Mine Shaft Tavern mixes the hands-down best desert-day margarita. The cucumber-jalapeño concoction is 16 ounces of refreshing, with a rim encrusted in Chimayó chile powder and salt. Owners Melinda Bon'ewell and Lori Lindsey transformed this former bandito biker bar into a destination in 2007. There's a museum attached to the space as well, with an old steam engine poking through the open-backed vintage theater (just step aboard to ring the bell).

Don't forget to look up at the night sky on the drive back to Santa Fe. Light ordinances promise stargazers clear views of all the globular clusters your eye can capture. Just locate the North Star and follow it home. Because once you're in Santa Fe, you really won't want to leave. ✖✖✖

TSAI ONE ON

Blue Dragon
324 A St., Boston
(617-338-8585)
ming.com/blue-dragon.htm

STACKING UP Blue Dragon's still finding its balance, but the black pepper shrimp banh mi made for a toothsome lunch.

CELEBRITY CHEF MING TSAI knows how to sell a product. In interviews, he calls Blue Dragon, his 80-seat eatery in the former A Street Deli space, the first Asian gastropub in the U.S. It's a strange assertion since just across Fort Point Channel in Chinatown, Shojo, with its David Chang–inspired cuisine and craft cocktail program, has been quietly serving some of the best bar food and drinks in the city. Claiming to be the first to pair alcohol with Asian-inflected food in a casual setting is a bit like declaring yourself emperor in the age of democratically elected parliaments—people everywhere are doing it and no one cares what it's called, as long as it's delicious. Unfortunately, while the flavors are bold, the food at Blue Dragon was too often one-note—either sweet, salty, sour or hot instead of some harmonious combination thereof.

The noodle dishes exemplified this problem. Dan dan noodles ($10) were an oily mess—a small tangle of noodles swimming in mala sauce and not much else. Garlic overpowered the garlic-sake clams with udon ($12), Tsai's take on linguine with clams, obscuring the seafood flavor of the clams and dashi broth. The made-in-house dumplings were generally better. Braised beef potstickers ($8) brought packets densely filled with short rib and Chinese celery, seared to crisp perfection on one side. Shrimp shumai ($9) offered five juicy, sweet golf-ball-sized dumplings topped with edamame.

Divided into five main sections—snacks; dim sum; plates; noodles, rice and veggies; and platters—the dinner menu aims to please across the entire appetite spectrum, from small bites for the after-dinner crowd to gargantuan portions that can feed four people. While the fried chicken ($25) was marinated in buttermilk tempura batter and strong spices, including Szechuan peppercorn, it tasted mainly of concretized batter, crispy without much flavor, which wasn't enhanced by the cloyingly sweet chili dipping sauce accompanying it. The salt and pepper shrimp had the opposite problem, with pepper the predominant seasoning on big shrimp ($30) presented with butterflied shells for easier removal.

Both platters, as well as a host of other dishes, including crispy frogs' legs ($10) and hamachi kama ($12), were detritus-producing affairs that could've benefited from waitstaff exchanging dirty plates for clean ones (a common Chinatown practice) as bones and sauces kept piling up. The best seats for service at the feng shui–optimized Blue Dragon aren't at the water or fire corners, but at the bar, especially when it's manned by head bartender John Drew, whose attentiveness and knowledge of the menu and drinks were a bright spot. Ask the Eastern Standard and Brick & Mortar alum to craft you a cocktail using his collection of bitters.

B.N.'s Picks

Black pepper shrimp banh mi

Coconut chicken and basil soup

While dinner didn't merit the long wait for a table, there were delights on the lunch menu that made Blue Dragon a good spot for an informal business meal. The black pepper shrimp banh mi ($12) had interesting proportions of aioli-dressed shrimp, black pepper and pickled vegetables between a chewy Iggy's baguette. The taro chips were light and crispy accompaniments to the sandwiches, better than any salty potato chip. Coconut chicken and basil soup ($4), a bright, lemongrass-infused soup served in a diner mug, was one of the rare dishes in which sweet, sour, spicy and salty flavors sang together.

The telegenic Tsai pioneered his trademark "East Meets West" cuisine more than a decade ago at Wellesley's Blue Ginger, and lines out the door at its new sister spot testify to the power of his charisma and popularity. There's no denying that he's introduced ingredients to people who wouldn't have otherwise experienced them, but the unbalanced dishes don't yet warrant the demand. ✖✖✖

BOYS OF SUMMER

Jordan Vogt-Roberts' The Kings of Summer brings a warmth to Sundance.

The Kings of Summer ★★★☆
Starring Nick Robinson, Gabriel Basso, Moises Arias, Nick Offerman, Erin Moriarty and Alison Brie. Written by Chris Galletta. Directed by Jordan Vogt-Roberts. At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

THERE ARE TWO TYPES OF Sundance movies. The first is the kind for which film festivals were created: searing personal stories told for seemingly no other reason than that the filmmakers just had to get them off their chests and share them with the world. The other type is far more common these days. Better known as "calling-card films," these are extended audition reels for Hollywood careers. Crowd-pleasers that often star semi-famous television stars, these movies are comfortably quirky without pushing it too far. They're quickly snapped up for a summer release as counter-programming to the blockbuster behemoths. If they catch on, the creative team moves along to bigger and better things within the studio system.

This is how Little Miss Sunshine writer Michael Arndt got the gig penning Toy Story 3, as well as some tiny upcoming indie flick called Star Wars: Episode VII. Director Marc Webb parlayed (500) Days of Summer into the pointless new Spider-Man saga, and in the most extreme case, Colin Trevorrow, who helmed the sleeper hit, kooky time travel comedy Safety Not Guaranteed, was recently hired for Jurassic Park 4 (a project that has since been placed on hold, presumably after Steven Spielberg sat down and actually watched Safety Not Guaranteed).

The Kings of Summer director Jordan Vogt-Roberts appears destined for similarly big breaks. This is a slick piece of work that juts out at just enough odd angles to be idiosyncratic, but never alienating. A charming, low-stakes coming-of-age story, it's an accomplished and amusing debut with modest aspirations that are, for the most part, achieved. I don't necessarily mean this to sound like damning with faint praise. I enjoyed the movie quite a bit, so much that a nagging part of me kept wishing they'd all tried a little harder.

This is a slick piece of work that juts out at just enough odd angles to be idiosyncratic, but never alienating.

Scripted by Chris Galletta, the movie stars newcomers Nick Robinson and Gabriel Basso as Joe and Patrick, best friends who have just barely survived the humiliation of their freshman year in high school. These two aren't exactly outcasts, but they're a far cry from cool. Patrick's mostly mortified by his hyper-annoying parents (Megan Mullally and Mark Evan Jackson), two oversharing noodges who make every interaction so awkward that Patrick breaks out in hives.

Joe's got it a bit rougher, as ever since his mother's death he's been dealing with his domineering, exasperated father, Frank Toy (Nick Offerman). It's not like Dad's even that bad of a guy, but it's clear Mom provided the nurturing part of the family dynamic, and Frank's brusque, casually insulting demeanor has already driven big sister Heather (Alison Brie) to move out as soon as humanly possible.

After accidentally stumbling on an untouched clearing in the woods a few miles from home, Joe and Patrick decide to run away and build a cabin of their own. (At Sundance, the film was called Toy's House, but apparently CBS Films decided to swap one lousy title for another.) It's a little boy's fantasy of roughing it in the great outdoors, living off the land and growing some comically pubescent excuse for facial hair.

This cabin in the woods is an improbably sturdy construction, but the best, most surreal flourish is that somewhere along the way our boys have managed to pick up a pal named Biaggio. Played by Moises Arias, he's an elfin, non sequitur–spouting sprite with oversized features and the haunted stare of a man 40 years his senior. Biaggio just appears and abruptly decides they're all best friends. Performing physically impossible feats and uttering sentences in which key words seem to have been swapped out like Mad Libs, Biaggio is the most hilarious third-wheel comic relief in a teen movie since Superbad's McLovin.

Less satisfying is a love triangle involving popular girl Kelly (Erin Moriarty) that grinds the film to a halt just when it starts to get cooking, but it's salvaged by the empathy Galletta and Vogt-Roberts' extend to Offerman's Frank. Anybody who watches NBC's Parks and Recreation already knows this actor is currently the reigning heavyweight champ of withering, deadpan put-downs. But the filmmakers wisely let us glimpse at the humanity behind his perpetual grumpiness. Frank's not so much a lousy father as he is just plain outmatched by a job he never expected he'd have to do alone.

There are so many flashes of a tougher, better movie throughout The Kings of Summer, you may resent when it settles for being good instead of great. But then Biaggio pops up again, and all is forgiven. ✖✖✖

LOFTY AMBITIONS

Jeff Tweedy oversees a festival that fits his band's artistic breadth—and includes an all-request night.

Wilco
plays the Solid Sound Festival at MASS MoCA on June 21–23.

JEFF TWEEDY DOESN'T LIKE music festivals. "I often say, sort of semi-jokingly, that I wouldn't go to any festival unless I was getting paid, because it's just not in my nature," the leader of Wilco says, citing discomfort with crowd sizes as well as the distance between stages at the major festivals that his band plays. "Most of the time, it's an in-and-out proposition, trying to minimize the misery."

Solid Sound—a Wilco-curated festival in its third year at the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art's factory complex in the Berkshires—provides the exception. "If you go to a restaurant with a small menu and you can hone in on what you want, you always end up being a lot more satisfied, and that's the way I look at Solid Sound," Tweedy says. "It's a lot more manageable, and it's a festival that I think I would enjoy going to."

[illegible] organizers, the June 21–23 fest offers what [illegible]'s strongest lineup of "bands we love." [illegible] to two nights headlined outdoors by [illegible]'s Solid Sound includes Neko [illegible], Foxygen, Low, the Dream [illegible] Martin & Wood and Border [illegible] duo of Marc Ribot and Los [illegible] Hidalgo. "Hopefully, we'll have a [illegible] interaction," says Tweedy, whose band also returns to the area in a supporting role on July 20, joining My Morning Jacket on a Bob Dylan bill at the Comcast Center.

The family-friendly Solid Sound lets Wilco stretch into side projects and installations as well. Bassist John Stirratt and guitarist/keyboardist Pat Sansone feature their band, the Autumn Defense. Mikael Jorgensen dips into synthesizer jams, while Nels Cline joins jazz upstart Julian Lage in another guitar duo. Drummer Glenn Kotche presents "Earth Drums," a hands-on percussion exhibit throughout the MASS MoCA campus. And Tweedy has created a simulated audio-visual view of the Loft, his group's Chicago studio space.

> "For me, the freedom of rock music was just to be able to grab whatever you fing wanted, from wherever you wanted."

Tweedy has long viewed Wilco fans as collaborators. "If they're demonstrative and feeding the band a certain amount of energy, that's a real collaboration," the singer/songwriter/producer says. "There's a real exchange there, of ideas or at least spirit and energy."

Along those lines, one of the festival's most intriguing events will be Wilco's first all-request show on opening night. The band solicited suggestions through online votes through June 4. "There are a lot of serious requests that people have put thought into," Tweedy reports, mentioning the Modern Lovers classic "Roadrunner" (currently in the running to be designated the Massachusetts state rock song) and the sinewy Television opus "Marquee Moon." Tweedy once took lessons from Richard Lloyd, half of Television's guitar tandem, and secured his Tom Verlaine-comparable foil when Cline joined Wilco.

Encore requests will be drawn more spontaneously through Twitter and a round of "Stump the Band," where comedian John Hodgman will play the Johnny Carson role, soliciting fan requests live. "There isn't a lot of rock music that we aren't machined to at least attempt," Tweedy says. "We have a lot of faith in our audience and in ourselves."

Wilco showcased its range on 2011's exceptional The Whole Love. Opener "Art of Almost" shifts from electronic bleeps and breakbeats to a thrashing coda where Cline goes wild, serving sharp contrast to the band's Beatles-esque pop leanings and alt-country roots. "For me, the freedom of rock music was to just be able to grab whatever you fing wanted, from wherever you wanted," says Tweedy, 45. "As I've gotten older, and Wilco's been around longer, that's the only way that it stays interesting."

Despite Wilco's well-documented upheavals in membership, the current sextet has remained intact for about half of the band's 19-year journey. "That was more of the goal than having the revolving lineup," he says. "My idea of a band is still and always will be the Monkees. I expected to live with people that I made music with, to slide down the fire pole and play a song for the visiting ambassador of Egypt." ×××

CORPORATE CULTURE

Business behavior is human nature.

WHEN MY GENERATION got out of college, most people believed that they would spend their entire working life with one company. Here's the comment I hear now from virtually all young people about the subject: "Forget it. Nobody today is loyal to their employees. Why should we be loyal to employers?" Disposable jobs in our ever-moving society.

I can remember when our manager, knowing the vice-chairman for a long time, and in the spirit of the revolution, had gone to the Common at lunchtime and recruited two young women, for 10 bucks apiece, to go streaking at the sales meeting. As the vice-chairman was leading the pep rally, two naked women raced in back of him, yelling and waving their hands. When they reached the office doors they pushed instead of pulled and fell to the ground, increasing the general chaos with the employees now lost in laughter. No one got fired. The moment passed.

Today, human resources departments would have been on the case for months. Years ago, HR did not exist. Nor did dozens of in-house lawyers at almost every corporation. Not to mention IT staffs. Information technology in investment firms used to consist of the teletype operator being able to change the inkers in the reels of the stock-exchange tickers and using scissors to cut off news stories on the Dow Jones machine.

Most corporations offered "rewards trips" for their leading sales people, a chance to bond, feel appreciated and blow off steam. Most people in business seldom socialize with their co-workers. But you can learn so much more about others in leisurely settings. People often show their true colors, good and bad. They do incredible things, cross dangerous lines, blow themselves up emotionally and financially.

Character can reveal all. In the mid '70s, a trip to Puerto Rico was enlivened by the CEO ordering his second in command to send home his guest: A young woman not married to the divorced executive. You couldn't cohabit in our culture with someone who was basically a date. "This gave the wrong message to our employees about what is acceptable behavior," our CEO said.

You can learn a lot about CEOs during downtime with the troops. On one of these jaunts, the president and CEO both rode into the festivities on top of two elephants. In my experience, never bet your money on a company's stock if the leaders think they are sultans. On another trip our chairman, after an evening of Planter's Punches and steel bands, ended up doing the full-body lambada on top of a table with the girlfriend of one of his department heads. Never bet on a company's stock if the CEO bird-dogs the date of the department head and dances with her on a table. Where was YouTube when we really needed it?

The behavior of people in the executive suites spills down to the troops. On one memorable adventure, we had a division of our company populated with a sales force highly motivated to set records. This was in the 1980s, when stock markets heated up and this rogue sales force believed that they were immortal and that greed would go on forever. There were pills and fine white powder, with the leaders ferrying in ladies of the night from the nearest city. Our old-fashioned crew was repulsed by their behavior, horrified that their name was associated with ours.

Eventually, we were given stock in that company. I gave mine to charity as soon as I received it, thinking: "If they, the organization, is rotten at the top, it spreads down in such destructive ways. Some day the place implodes." During the financial system meltdown of the past five years, that stock went to zero.

On these trips, you also got to see the politicking and backbiting and maneuvering that takes place in the court of the emperor, among the minions of the CEO. The nicer the CEO, the more swiftly he or she could be brought down. It was no different, in my view, when Brutus and his conspirators assassinated Caesar. It's fascinating to watch power and manipulation in action. And no wonder so many young people have no intention of working for major corporations. But I have news for them. Every organization, or small business, is exactly the same as the major global brands. Politics and human nature rule.

If you do work for a Fortune 500 company, take to heart the story of one of my best friends. He was my only college buddy who went to work for a giant company, one of the big three automakers. You have to be an optimist.

"How are things at work?" I used to ask him when he first went to work.

"Fantastic," he'd say.

After he was there for three or four years, I asked him again, "How are things?"

He answered. "Fantastic. I used to have thousands of people ahead of me. Now I only have hundreds."

See if you can spend some downtime with your boss. And pay attention. ×××

COMMENCEMENT '13

Advice on how to win people and influence friends

DEAR CLASS OF 2013, Thank you for inviting me to speak at your prestigious institution. I know you graduated two weeks ago, so first off I'd like to commend you on your patience for sitting here since then. But honestly, it's not like most of you had anywhere to go. May as well fire up a few games of ultimate, right?

But you'll soon remove that cap and gown and step forward into the land of adulthood, a ruthless place where much is expected of you. I don't want to harsh your mellow, as the kids say, but you'll probably have a hard time finding a job. That is, unless you graduated in the top 10 percent of your class at Harvard and you're applying for a job on an Alaskan crabbing boat, where [illegible] you "Ivy League" and haze you with [illegible] beatings until the fourth or fifth trip, [illegible] you'll save the deck foreman from a rogue [illegible] and begrudgingly mutter, "You're all [illegible]." And you'll say, "Ashok... My [illegible] because I forgot to mention that [illegible].

[illegible] can't have my job. Not that [illegible] CareerCast just ranked "journ[illegible]" as [illegible] desirable on a list of 200 jobs. Good thing I don't consider myself a journalist and neither would any of my favorite trusted sources—if they actually existed. As for whether my profession is really the least desirable job in the top 200, I'm mature enough to handle that assessment like a gentleman. Hey, at least it came in higher than the 202nd worst job, which is working at CareerCast. The 201st worst job (which, remember, is better than working at CareerCast) is scrubbing monkey butts at the zoo.

Back when I graduated, there were a ton of jobs in tech startups, the kind of places where you'd get paid a mountain of dough to play foosball in an edgy loft space all day. Those jobs are gone, by which I mean they're now in San Francisco. On the other hand, you new graduates have opportunities that didn't exist for me. I'm talking about horizontal drilling, baby. Fracking. I don't want to hear any griping about the job market when pretty much anyone can jump in the car, drive to North Dakota and live in a Walmart parking lot while working as a roughneck on a frack pad. And it's not just about fracking! Those places need strippers, too.

What else? Well, thanks to CERN you new graduates have the Higgs Boson. That's pretty exciting, huh? Think of the jobs that might create. All those bisons are going to need feed and grooming and upkeep. Look, ranch work isn't for everyone, but it'll build character and look good on your résumé.

What about the lottery? I swear these Powerball jackpots just keep getting higher and higher. If you can't afford a Powerball ticket—and because you just graduated, I assume you can't—you can always go through the Dumpster out behind Cumberland Farms and look for scratch tickets that mistakenly got thrown away. A lot of people don't realize that you automatically win when you get a candy cane symbol on the Frosty the Doughman tickets. Some of those are worth a free ticket or even a dollar.

On another bright note, the stock market's near an all-time high. That must be great for all you recent grads who have a lot of wealth tied up in stocks. The rest of you are probably saying "stock market, sock market," right? Wait: great idea. Let's solicit some first-round seed money and start an online sock store—no, sock curator—out of a warehouse in an up-and-coming corner of San Francisco. I mean, there has to be a better way to buy socks, right? We'll call it SokR, and suddenly it'll be the only cool way to share photos of your socks, if that's also something it does. I mean, we haven't monetized it yet, but the revenue stream is functionalized by the market share of the platform agnostics. Learn to say things like that and you won't ever need a job.

Finally, my friends, you can't spell "diploma" without "Diplo," my favorite DJ to recently apologize for tweeting mean things about Daft Punk. Specifically, he wrote, "This new daft punk album would probably be really good to take drugs to and listen to on a rainy bridge across the gulf of mexico but I dnt know." Kids, if I have one piece of advice, it's to never apologize to French dance-music composers who pretend they're robots. As you surely learned in college, that's how World War II started.

In conclusion, I'd like you to remember that this isn't an end, it's a beginning. You applied to grad school, right? ×××

Soroff On CASEY SHERMAN

The true-crime author talks about murder, corruption and being a mama's boy.

BEST-SELLING BOSTON AUTHOR CASEY SHERMAN, 43, WAS BORN AND raised in Hyannis and graduated from BU. He worked as a TV news producer for WBZ-TV Channel 4 until his writing career took off after the publication of his first book in 2003. Based on the true story of his aunt, A Rose for Mary: The Hunt for the Real Boston Strangler was followed by Black Irish, Black Dragon, Bad Blood: Freedom and Death in the White Mountains and The Finest Hours: The True Story of the US Coast Guard's Most Daring Sea Rescue, as well as this year's Animal: The Bloody Rise and Fall of the Mob's Most Feared Assassin. Sherman was nominated for an Emmy Award, a finalist for the 2010 Massachusetts Book of the Year award and the winner of the 2010 Truth and Justice Award. He lives in Boston with his wife and children.

Jonathan Soroff: Growing up, were you aware of your aunt and the Boston Strangler?
Casey Sherman: I wasn't aware of it at all. My mother sheltered me from what had happened to her sister. She was 17 when her 19-year-old sister was murdered, so she lost not just a sister but her best friend.

So when did you put two and two together?
Not until I was a teenager. I saw the movie The Boston Strangler on Dana Hersey's Movie Loft on Channel 38. Henry Fonda and Tony Curtis were the ones who helped me figure out what had happened to my aunt. The next day, I broached the subject with my mother. She was getting emotional, so I said, "Well, at least they got the guy." And she looked up at me and said, "No. They never did."

Did it ever give you nightmares?
Yeah. But it wasn't about the people from 40 years ago. I started getting calls from people saying, "Stay away from this." There were people who didn't want the past unearthed.

Why?
They knew Albert DeSalvo wasn't the killer in 1964, and a lot of guys made their careers in politics and law enforcement off that case.

Are you especially suspicious of other people because of what happened to your aunt?
I think you have to be. I always have to vet the official information that comes out, because a lot of the time, I don't think it's true.

What are the chances I've met a serial killer?
In a city like Boston, you never know who the real killers are. The real killers never fit the profile. These people are always very understated, the last person you'd suspect of committing a heinous crime. That was the case with the guy who killed my aunt.

So how can you spot a killer?
The body language. The eyes always tell you the story. But there could be a killer right here, and we wouldn't know it. I had a gym teacher at Barnstable High who committed murder, and I had a friend on the football team—the most innocent kid in the world—who ended up killing a girl in Quincy in 1993. That's one small town on Cape Cod that produced two murderers.

What's the fascination with the Irish mob?
It's interesting that people think of Whitey Bulger as the beginning and end of organized crime. He's not. He ran a small crew, a violent crew, in South Boston, but he never controlled the rackets. Now that he's in a small cell, people are going to find out more and more every day what a shabby, small-time crook he was. He never would have been powerful without his brother, and vice versa. He wouldn't have survived the Irish gang war in the 1960s. Those guys made Bulger look like an amateur. Bulger killed women; he got off on that. These gangsters were soldiers on the street.

Author you'd compare yourself to?
My literary heroes are the Steinbecks and Hemingways of the world. Complete ss as human beings, but I like the short declarative sentence. Not that I'm in their league.

Dennis Lehane or Sebastian Junger?
Lehane. I like Dennis, and I'm not a big fan of Junger's writing. I think he's a sloppy journalist. His book about the Boston Strangler was much more fiction than fact. He's a nice enough guy, and he was one of the people who encouraged me to do a book on the Boston Strangler, but I think his wasn't very good.

Do you trust the police?
I do. I trust the boots-on-the-ground cops, not the politicians with badges. People ask if my Boston Strangler book was an indictment of police work, and it was the opposite. It's a tribute to honest police work. The official information came from the guys who were trying to promote their careers and had never set foot at a crime scene. F them. The detectives who did the actual work got penalized and put on lousy duty because they knew the truth.

Ever kill anybody?
No, but I had the opportunity to kill my aunt's murderer. I met him face to face and confronted him with the evidence, and the rage I felt building—I can understand how someone can kill. I had to swallow it that day.

What does your shrink say about all this?
[Laughs] My shrink is my mother. She's my harshest critic. My father died when I was 17, and I've wanted to be that success in her eyes. But she's the first one to say, "Hey, cut the s." She keeps me honest.

Did you always want to be a writer?
I didn't even intend to write a book on the Boston Strangler. I was just investigating it to give my mother some closure. But then a bunch of high-profile writers offered to write it for me, and I figured, "I'm a journalist. I can do it." Now I can't imagine doing anything else.

Ever been arrested?
At spring break in Daytona Beach in 1988 for the open-container law. I was handcuffed to a parking meter for hours, and it was at night. Everybody was drunk. They were punching us, pouring beer on us... It's pretty hilarious now. Not so much then.

Crime you wish you could solve?
The Gardner heist, locally, is one I can't wait to see solved, and they're close. Also the Karina Holmer case. She was the Swedish nanny found chopped up in a dumpster outside all the nightclubs on the Alley. They never solved that.

How did you get so hardheaded and feisty?
I'm Irish. I'm short. And I don't take no for an answer. ×××

Summertime and THE GRILLIN' Is Easy

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
FOOD STYLING BY CATRINE KELTY

THERE ARE THOSE WHO BELIEVE THAT FOOD IS JUST A VEHICLE FOR KETCHUP.

Others put mayonnaise on everything (I have a cousin who once dipped an orange popsicle into a jar of Hellmann's). And don't even get me started on relish bores. (They share roughly the same seasonality as golf bores.)

Whatever your condiment of choice, we're in the halcyon days of BBQs, picnics, long basks on the beach and backyard entertaining. So we canvassed some of our favorite chefs for their homemade recipes for hot sauce, ketchup, mayo, relish and mustard, along with suitable dishes on which to slather them.

—RECIPE CARD—

Zentner adapted this recipe from an old book on wild game butchery, finding it interesting that it used egg yolks to thicken the mustard. (The original called only for eggs, mustard powder, vinegar and honey.) The recipe is the base for Gaslight's Le Philippe Sandwiche, named for Le Philippe—an 1850s Paris restaurant that specialized in steak, onion soup and other hearty items.

Mustard Ingredients

- 1 cup dry mustard
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 8 eggs
- ½ cup white wine vinegar
- Hot sauce (Zentner prefers Crystal)
- 1 tablespoon honey
- ½ cup dark beer (not IPA)
- 3 large garlic cloves
- 1 teaspoon turmeric
- ¼ cup olive oil
- 1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
- 1 tablespoon caraway seeds
- ½ cup whole-grain mustard
- ¼ teaspoon mustard oil
- ½ teaspoon Chinese hot mustard

Prep

1. Blend dry mustard with water to remove lumps.
2. Separate egg whites from yolks (only the yolks will be used).
3. Crush garlic cloves with salt.
4. Toast caraway seeds.

Method

1. Combine all ingredients in a double-boiler and whisk until light and fluffy. The mixture should reach 170 degrees on an instant-read thermometer.
2. Immediately chill over ice and store in labeled containers.

LE PHILIPPE SANDWICHE

Ingredients

- 5 lbs. beef short ribs
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
- 1 teaspoon granulated garlic
- 1 tablespoon chili powder
- 1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
- 1 tablespoon soy sauce
- 1 teaspoon cracked black pepper
- 1 large white onion
- 16 oz. dark beer (again, not IPA)
- Chicken stock (as needed)
- 1 garlic clove
- 10 sprigs of thyme
- 1 bay leaf
- Ciabatta bread
- Philippe mustard

Prep

1. Marinate short ribs in a mixture of the next six ingredients for one day, and then brush off and discard marinade.
2. Dice onion.
3. Create a sachet with garlic, thyme and bay leaf.

Method

1. Brown the beef in butter until deeply caramelized.
2. Deglaze the pan with the onion, scraping the bottom of the pan with a wooden spoon.
3. Deglaze the pan a second time with beer and reduce.
4. Combine chicken stock with beef and sachet, using enough chicken stock to cover the meat in the braising liquid.
5. Bring the liquid to a simmer, skim and then cook at 300 degrees in a nonconvection oven for 2–4 hours, until tender.
6. Strain the meat and reserve the onions and braising liquid until ready to serve the sandwiches.
7. Shred the meat and add the onion.
8. Spread the Philippe mustard on the bread and pile with meat.
9. Brush the bread with butter and grill on both sides until golden brown.
10. Serve the sandwich with a side of the braising liquid.

—RECIPE CARD—

A proprietor of an authentic tapas place in Brookline, Hansen says, "In Spain, they almost always make their own mayonnaise and then put astonishingly large quantities of it on their boiled langoustines, on their asparagus, white or green. Called mahonesa, after the Balearic Island [town] Mahon, where it was first made, this is a Spanish condiment, not a French one."

Lemon Mayonnaise Ingredients
- 1 large free-range egg
- ¼ teaspoon kosher salt
- 1 cup light olive oil
- 2 tablespoons high-quality extra-virgin Spanish olive oil
- 1 lemon

Prep
1. Finely zest lemon.

Method
1. Using an immersion blender or stick blender and a bowl with tall sides, beat the egg and the salt.
2. Slowly add the olive oil, a drizzle at a time.
3. Use an up-and-down motion if using the stick blender. (Hansen says, "You can also use a regular blender on a low speed, but I find food processors don't work well, as they're too wide. It's also very important to use a tall, narrow vessel, like your French coffee press glass or the like.")
4. The mayonnaise should be as thick as possible, which is achieved by adding a lot of oil, but you must stop adding as soon as you see that your drops won't incorporate quickly and easily. (Hansen says, "I've found that a bit over one cup to one egg is perfect.")
5. Add lemon zest. (Using zest, rather than juice, keeps the mayo thicker.)

COLD ASPARAGUS WITH LEMON MAYONNAISE

Ingredients
- 1 bunch medium asparagus

Prep
1. Trim asparagus.
2. Grill them.
3. Chill them.

Method
Place one layer of asparagus on a plate, and spoon most of the mayonnaise across the center.

—RECIPE CARD—

This Kendall Square gem is clean and spare, so that what diners notice most are the intense flavors of Leviton's unfussy, crowd-pleasing menu. Note that the sweet pickle chips can be used on other dishes, but for relish, they go great on (what else?) an all-beef hot dog. At the Area Four hot dog cart—or A4 Truck—the franks are true "dirty water dogs," i.e., they steep them in warm water to heat them up and then throw them on the griddle before serving.

Relish Ingredients
- 1 lb. pickling cucumbers
- 4 ounces red bell peppers
- 4 ounces red onion
- 1 pint ice cubes
- 3 teaspoons salt
- ½ teaspoon mustard seed
- ¾ lb. sugar
- 1 ½ teaspoon celery seed
- 1 ½ teaspoon allspice berries
- ¾ teaspoon turmeric
- 10 oz. cider vinegar

Prep
1. Slice cucumbers to 3/16th of an inch.
2. Finely julienne the peppers and onion.
3. Toss the vegetables with the ice and salt, and allow to brine for at least one hour.

Method
1. Combine the remaining ingredients in a small stockpot and bring to a boil.
2. Remove from heat and allow to steep for one hour.
3. Drain excess liquid from vegetables.
4. Bring vinegar mixture back to a boil and pour over vegetables.
5. Allow to cool, and pickle for at least 24 hours.
6. Use as pickle slices, or for relish, pulse in a food processor until desired consistency is reached.

AREA FOUR HOT DOG

Ingredients
- High quality all-beef hot dogs (Area Four uses BN Ranch, made from grass-fed cattle)
- High-quality hot dog buns (New England–style split-top buns are easier for grilling/toasting)

Prep
1. Boil water, OR
2. If you prefer your hot dog grilled, bring grill to desired heat.
3. Butter both sides and grill buns.

Method
1. Boil/grill hot dog to desired doneness.
2. Serve on bun with Area Four relish.

—RECIPE CARD—

Since opening his sleek eatery near Kendall Square, chef William Kovel has earned consistent raves from critics and the public alike. One of his most popular dishes is also one of his simplest: a good, old-fashioned burger. But it's served with a house-made ketchup that will have you cheating on Heinz in no time.

Ketchup Ingredients

- 1 lb. chopped red bell peppers
- 1 medium Spanish onion
- ½ cup sugar
- ½ cup vinegar
- 3 tablespoons tomato paste
- 3 tablespoons sambal oelek (a chile-based sauce popular in Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore, available at Southeast Asian markets)
- ½ tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
- Salt to taste

Prep

1. Pan-roast peppers and onions in oil.
2. Make a caramel with the vinegar and sugar, cooking until golden. Be careful not to inhale.

Method

1. Add tomato paste to pepper and onion mixture. Fry the paste well, but be careful not to burn it.
2. Add the caramel to the mixture. Add sambal oelek. Cook until thick and jammy and the tomato is cooked.
3. Adjust seasoning. Add Worcestershire sauce.
5. Purée, strain and chill.

CATALYST BURGER

Ingredients

- 8 oz. burger patties made from an 80/20 mix of North American corn-fed beef (which Kovel says has "just enough fat to keep it perfectly moist and juicy and have a striking taste")
- 1 large white onion
- Tomatoes
- Cheese (optional)
- Lemon aioli (optional)
- Brioche

Prep

1. Caramelize onion.
2. Slow-roast tomatoes.

Method

1. Grill burger until medium-rare (something that's difficult to find at restaurants these days).
2. Top with caramelized onion, slow-roasted tomatoes, Catalyst ketchup and other ingredients, as desired.
3. Serve on brioche.

HOT SAUCE — ROLANDO ROBLEDO, CORPORATE EXECUTIVE CHEF, AND AYR MUIR, CEO/FOUNDER; BOTH OF CLOVER

—RECIPE CARD—

What began as a well-kept secret of the food-truck cognoscenti has blossomed into a fleet of trucks and several brick-and-mortar locations, all of them serving up healthy, local and (when possible) organic fast food. The following recipe is proportioned to yield sauce and salad for 10–15 people:

Hot Sauce Ingredients
- 8 cups dried chiles de árbol, stems removed
- 1–6 fresh habanero chiles (or to taste), washed, stems removed
- ½ teaspoon whole coriander seeds
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- ⅓ cup white wine vinegar
- ¼ cup water
- 2 cloves garlic, peeled

Prep

1. Place dried chiles de árbol in a glass container and cover with cold water. Place in refrigerator, covered, for at least one day, or until soft.
2. Seed and coarsely chop habanero chiles.
3. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a dry cast-iron or oven-safe pan, toast coriander seeds for 7 minutes, shaking pan halfway through toasting.

Method

1. Combine chopped chiles de árbol and habanero chiles with remaining ingredients. Divide between two bowls.
2. Process each batch on high for 2 minutes, adjusting with additional water or vinegar until a smooth paste is achieved.

CLOVER SPICY BROCCOLI SALAD
(WITH GARLIC SCAPES AND SPRING ONION OR SCALLIONS)

Ingredients
- 7 heads broccoli (including stalk)
- 2 bunches scallions or spring onion
- 1 bunch garlic scapes
- ¼ cup Clover hot sauce
- 3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 1 tablespoon sugar

Prep

1. Wash and trim the root ends of the broccoli. Do not discard the stalks.
2. Wash, dry and thinly slice scallions or spring onion and garlic scapes.

Method

1. Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil.
2. Fill a large container with ice and cold water.
3. Blanch broccoli by the bunch until tender—about 3 minutes each, but no more than 4 minutes. Broccoli should be bright green.
4. Shock broccoli in the ice bath and move gently to ensure all hot spots can cool. Chill for 5 minutes or until cold, and drain using a colander or sieve.
5. Trim broccoli into bite-sized pieces.
6. In a large bowl, whisk together Clover hot sauce, red wine vinegar, salt, sugar, scallions or spring onions and garlic scapes.

Will the Esplanade be the new Seaport?

BY NANCY GAINES

For more than a year, there's been a faint buzz in town about a big project. So big, like Edna Ferber's literary landscapes. So big, that—even now, when it's more a fever dream than a public dialogue—it's really scary.

This is the notion to move Storrow Drive.

Shoving it to the left (or right, if you're from Newton). Narrowing, greening. All seemingly as plausible as putting the cows back on the Common. Almost as daunting as depressing the Artery, but, hey, that eventually worked.

As we know, crazy schemes like building a seaport district on empty car lots in Southie—or turning a former bathroom in the nation's oldest public park into a sandwich shop—do come true in Boston, strong but slow. Or they do if you're tough enough to dream, and push and shove and make a lot of noise.

So why shouldn't the good citizens of the city move Storrow Drive to make way for another slate of waterfront dining options? The Esplanade Association, a private group of preservationists, are self-described big dreamers and pushy people. They ask why, and say why not?

This assemblage of rich people, fundraisers and volunteers was so appalled with the deteriorating physical and ecological condition of the Esplanade along the Charles River, it formed a group in 2001 to work toward restoring and enhancing it. Over the decade, they raised money for improvements to Esplanade plants, grass, trees and play areas (like the slide Tom Brady seems to love). They also corralled expert local developers, architects and urban designers to come up with a plan for the future. They worked with officials at the state Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR), which oversees parkland. But mostly on their own, they confected what they consider a feasible blueprint for improving the narrow two-and-a-half-mile shelf along the Charles River. Called Esplanade 2020, the vision (as in both years and eyesight, get it?) that was published and circulated in February last year sees all this occurring within seven years.

"Opportunities like this come along once in a lifetime," says Anthony Pangaro, a longtime Boston developer now a partner in the Millennium Partners Boston, which will fill the notorious hole in the ground at the old Filene's. A member of the Esplanade 2020 planning advisory group, Pangaro sees moving sections of Storrow Drive and upgrading the parkland as "relatively simple, although not cheap. Mass. Eye and Ear already is making headway on a five-year plan there. If someone has vision, they get things done."

And the document he helped create is nothing if not visionary.

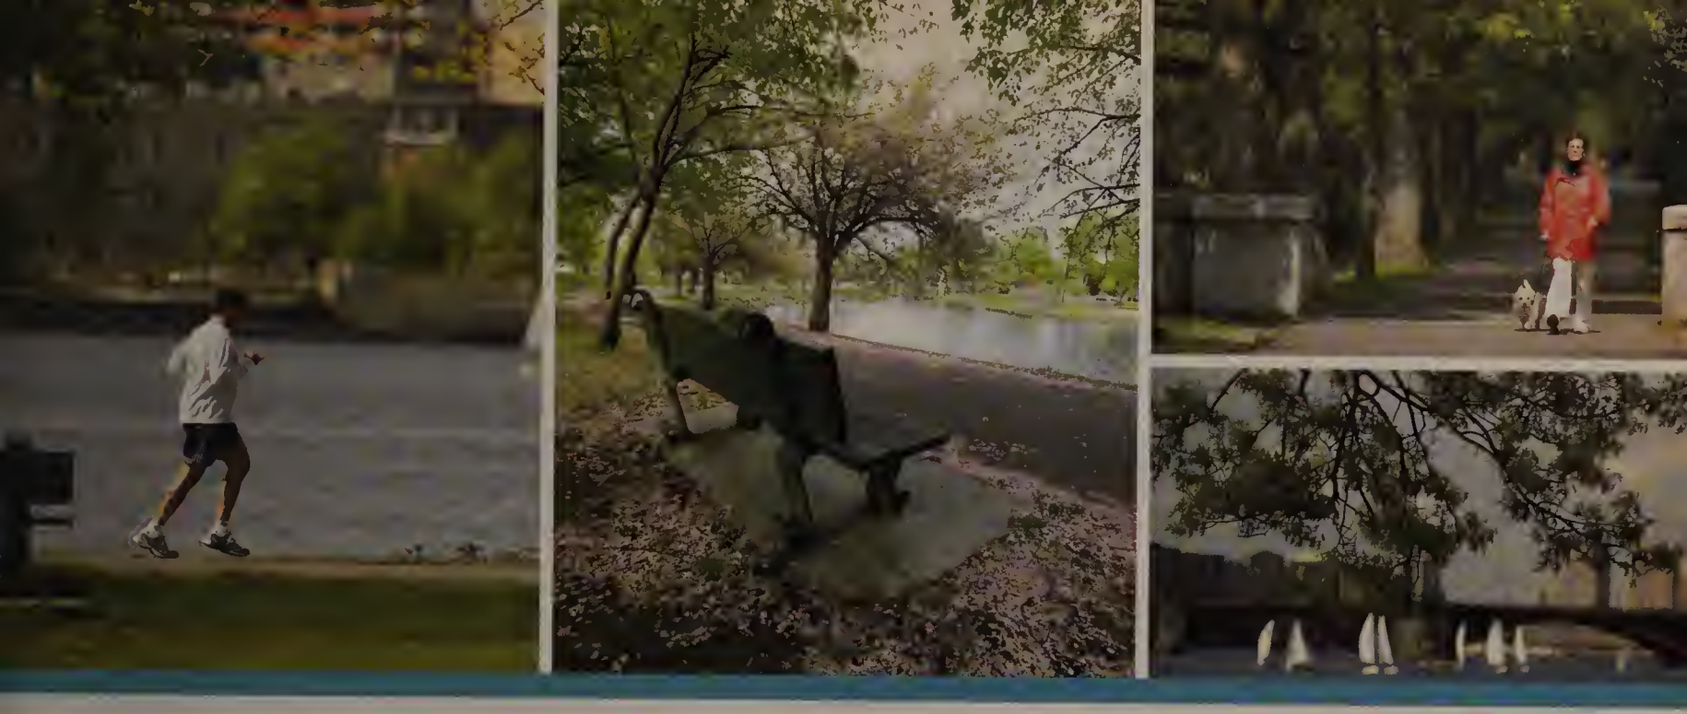
Adds Fritz Casselman, vice chair of the Esplanade Association, "This is not a tomorrow thing, but it's not a decade away either."

The striking document has more than a hundred pages laced with colorful drawings, schematics and photos to show what could occur on the 103-year-old treasured cityscape. "But let me be clear," says the chair of the association's board of directors, Margo Newman, "these ideas are meant to be illustrative and thought-provoking, not definitive, let's-build-it-just-like-this plans. The concepts have not been approved by any controlling agency." Reclamation of the parkland under Storrow would raise the question of redirecting traffic. The plan's tinkerers don't cite specifics but say, for instance, "any rethinking of Storrow Drive should begin with the goal of protecting nearby residential streets and businesses by rerouting traffic onto other thoroughfares, most notably the Massachusetts Turnpike."

Esplanade 2020 also calls for shifting lanes on Storrow Drive and removing elevated ramps. A new roadway tunnel would connect the Esplanade with the Public Garden and Back Bay.

The grand rethinking foresees new waterside walks, eateries, terraces, river swimming from a floating barge, and a restored pool and bathhouse. A whimsical Music Bosque—a "shady grove in the informal style of a French urban park like the Jardin des Tuileries"—would sit within a plaza with a rebuilt café and picnic areas, described in the plan as having "moveable tables, benches and chairs like those seen in New York's Bryant Park," plus a "new concept" year-round café.

Parks as in Paris, New York, San Francisco and London (yes, the Eye!) all make an appearance. In fact, Esplanade 2020 calls for no less than four new eateries, a restaurant and terrace near the Museum of Science, a kiosk that serves gelato near Community Boating, a "cozy café," and a "concept café" (dare we think Tavern on the Green in its heyday?) replacing the pitiable Café Esplanade snack bar at the end of the Fiedler Bridge ramp. But "the café is the only real buy-in we agree on to happen next," Casselman says. He notes one step forward was that this year the state for the first time put out to bid the operation of the existing Café Esplanade. With the new management, "we assume this will be a better operation," he says, "and should tell us a lot. Does it attract people, or just people who are desperate for a hot dog? Will it make more money?"



Deploying glorious language in present "as if" tense, the 2020 plan describes the shack's futuristic replacement as follows:

Carefully sited and beautifully designed, the new café has added an architectural jewel to the Esplanade. The building itself has been profiled in national magazines and on TV as one of the first public buildings in the U.S. built to 'passive house' standards—meaning that it is so precisely engineered and insulated that it runs on a tiny fraction of the energy that a comparable structure would require.

It goes on for another paragraph, throwing out references to composting toilets, a "signature fireplace" and the aforementioned Music Bosque. It's nothing if not lofty.

"Restaurants are a way to transform outdoor spaces," says Mike Ross, Boston city councilor, who is among many running for mayor. "Remember, you're talking to the guy who wrote the legislation to bring a crumbling old building into the 21st century," he says, referring to the Earl of Sandwich on Boston Common, formerly the abandoned "Pink Palace" public toilets.

Ross says he believes people want a "quality restaurant" on the Esplanade, one that "definitely" serves at least beer and wine, perhaps with valet parking, or guests could walk from parking in the surrounding areas. But "lack of parking never kept anyone from going to a good restaurant," he avers. "If you build it, they will come."

Sanguine though he may be, Ross is in the distinct minority of Bostonians who have even heard about any of these visions—or would discuss them. Mayor Thomas Menino's office referred comment to the Boston Redevelopment Authority, which had no comment other than to refer us to Parks & Recreation, where a spokeswoman offered only that she thought the Earl of Sandwich was doing very well. The state had no comment either. "It's their vision," said S.J. Port of DCR, referring to the Esplanade Association.

Meanwhile, of a dozen or more business people and restaurant operators we called, none had heard of Esplanade 2020. Not one.

Two civic-minded developers generally in the know had essentially nothing to say. Dick Friedman, developer of the Liberty Hotel next to Storrow, said, "intuitively," the restaurant "strikes me as not a very good idea; it's parkland, isn't it?" But he said he didn't want to discuss a plan about which he has no knowledge. Roger Berkowitz, owner of Legal Sea Foods, also said he had no knowledge of Esplanade 2020 and didn't want to speculate.

Unawareness aside, there is—mostly—enthusiasm and goodwill out there. Told about the public/private proposition, one restaurateur said waspishly, "Oh good. Minimal bureaucracy."

Another, less expansive café in the 2020 plan would be in the Upper Gatehouse at the Charles dam, which now houses a unit of the state police. Executive chef/co-owner Dante de Magistris of the nearby Restaurant Dante, located in the Royal Sonesta Hotel on the Cambridge side of the Charles near the Museum of Science, says he hadn't heard of the 2020 vision, but "would love to be part of something new and exciting. The area needs more people than those who just walk by. It needs access from other streets, and parking. New restaurants, not just a bunch of chains, would be great. Something, yes, that I'd bid on."

Steve DiFillippo, owner of Davio's in the Back Bay since 1985 (albeit at different locations), was enthused enough to ask how to get a copy of the 2020 plan. "They might have to build a parking lot," he says, "'cause if they closed a lane of Storrow it would drive people crazy, but I like it. I love it!"

Esplanade Association chair Margo Newman emphasizes this is but a vision. "Any new structures like these proposed for the Esplanade would require a robust, formal public process." And it's early days. But, says Casselman, his group would be studying the café notion, with an eye to creating a Request for Proposals to be put out by the state. "There's no price tag attached to the café," he says. "We'd have to figure out seating, how big a kitchen, traffic, potential revenue. We'll push something within a year."

The next area of concentration, he says, would be redevelopment near the abandoned pool and bathhouse by the Teddy Ebersol ballfield.

For that location, the Esplanade Association plan forecasts, "the [Esplanade] Pavilion's program includes bike, skate, and ski rental; a cozy café; public restrooms; shower facilities; meeting/class/events space; and storage space for the ball field sports."

The Esplanade project would probably have to be underwritten via a public/private partnership (PPP), a risky investment vehicle. By law, the state would have to accept the low-bid developer. Such awards have sometimes forfeited quality. For example, the city of Gary, Ind., hired a nationwide private firm to run its water-treatment facility, and "the workers saved money by bringing water up to EPA standards only when they knew the water would be tested," says PPP researcher Colleen Shea. Despite the risks, the efficiency and expertise required to make money is exactly what makes some private companies better at project delivery than a public entity would be.

Casselman says he thinks the plan could involve PPPs on a per-project basis, with his association raising money to fund about 60 percent of the redevelopment and the state DCR hefting the rest.

Public unawareness, official disinterest and daunting development aside, who could fault the notion of a more perfect Esplanade? On a recent visit, a humid Saturday in late May, EarthFest attracted thousands of people with live music from the Hatch Shell. But because of security precautions, they weren't allowed to bring in food, never mind drinks. Bags were searched or confiscated. In other sections, strollers (of the mechanical and human kind), youth soccer players, bench sitters, playground-goers and a few souls on the tennis courts populated the park. The only place to grab a bite was the forlorn snack shack. Could this be replaced by a greenhouse bistro with fireplace and fairy lights?

"If we blow this or think too small," cautions Anthony Pangaro, "then the chance is gone for another generation." ✖✖✖

PRIDE, NOT PREJUDICE

Burnt Out

Catherine is a successful but lonely academic. Her former roommate Gwen is a frustrated stay-at-home mom married to Don, a pot-smoking college dean—who also happens to be Catherine's ex. When the three reconnect, an old flame flares and the sparks start flying. A 2013 Pulitzer finalist, Rapture, Blister, Burn tackles, with fiery wit, the fallout of the feminist movement as the women second-guess their choices and wrangle with the perspectives of Catherine's septuagenarian mother and Gwen's 20-year-old babysitter. Feel the heat through June 22 at the Boston Center for the Arts' Calderwood Pavilion.

Brad's Battle

Death or Gloury

Inglourious Basterds indulgently reimagines the end of the Second World War to give the good guys a little more vengeance, and grant Brad Pitt enough face time to melt the hearts of the girls back home. From the bloodthirsty creator behind cult classics such as Reservoir Dogs and Pulp Fiction, Inglourious Basterds takes us to Nazi-occupied France during World War II, where a Jewish theater owner and a motley crew of U.S. soldiers, known by the Germans as "The Basterds," simultaneously plot to take down a group of S.S. officers. Led by ruthless Lt. Aldo Raine (Pitt), the Basterds set out to kill at least 100 Nazis each, guns blazing. Come see Pitt and his eight-man army take down Hitler and his henchmen in Inglourious Basterds, playing on June 9 at the Brattle Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (In the suburbs.)

Admission ★★ Gene Siskel used to say that his litmus test for any movie was if he'd rather be watching a documentary about the cast having lunch. Admission certainly failed. The film, which strands a ridiculously talented ensemble in a swamp with a muted, semi-dramatic tone, is undercut by occasionally stupid sight gags. Tina Fey puts a lid on her frazzled Liz Lemon energy to play an uptight Princeton admissions officer knocked for a loop when her longtime lover (Michael Sheen) bolts with a harpy Virginia Woolf scholar. Then a smiling do-gooder (Paul Rudd) at an alternative high school thinks his latest prodigy might be the son Fey put up for adoption 17 years ago. Adapted from a novel by Jean Hanff Korelitz, the movie meanders in several directions without any sense of urgency, blanding down the crackerjack comic talents of the leads. Only Lily Tomlin is immune to the lethargy, playing Fey's mother as a mouthy feminist with a Bella Abzug tattoo. These actors are better than this. (In the suburbs.)

Before Midnight ★★★★ We first met Celine and Jesse in 1995 with director Richard Linklater's Before Sunrise. Two doe-eyed young lovers spent a chatty, star-crossed evening in Vienna, and the movie was flush with youthful romanticism, to the point where some of us cynics found it mildly insufferable. In 2004, Before Sunset raised the stakes considerably, with stars Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke taking on screenwriting duties alongside Linklater. A tough-minded, revelatory picture, it found Celine and Jesse meeting again after nine long years of dashed hopes. Nearly a decade later, the trio has reunited for their masterpiece, Before Midnight, which once again takes the form of an extended, gorgeously choreographed dialogue between Delpy and Hawke. After nine years, it's now about sticking together despite the day-to-day grind of annoyances and disappointments. Happily ever after isn't as easy as it looks in the movies. The first two Before movies were about romantic projections; this one is the real love story. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Company You Keep ★★ ½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former mem-

Late Love

Night and Day

Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke star in Before Midnight, a continuation of Before Sunrise and Before Sunset.

ber of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (In the suburbs.)

Disconnect ★ One of those deadly serious "everybody is connected" parables that were all the rage about 10 years ago, this magnificently misguided effort tells three interlocking stories of lives ruined by Wi-Fi. Pitched somewhere near the somber worst-case scenarios of a driver's education training film, it's Reefer Madness with smartphones. The title is more of a command: Unplug your modem or certain doom lies in wait. Early on, it becomes impossible not to imagine screenwriter Andrew Stern as Grandpa Simpson, waving his cane and telling all you kids to get your damn Twitter off his lawn. Lord knows, online bullying and child exploitation are serious problems, and obviously our era of connectivity has left us vulnerable to cybercrimes. But the film's incessant alarmist tone is laughably unconvincing. For most sane, well-adjusted folks, using the Internet is just a fact of life, not a cause for garment-rending hysteria. Millions of people meet and communicate online every day; it's really not the end of the world, dude. (In the suburbs.)

The East ★ ½ This pulpy, extremely silly thriller, the third collaboration from screenwriter/actress Brit Marling and director Zal Batmanglij, who previously underwhelmed audiences with Another Earth and Sound of My Voice, suggests these two must have some sort of blackmail evidence against Fox Searchlight to get such refried wheezes into cinemas every year. Marling stars again, deploying her patented porcelain doll anti-charisma as a private security operative charged with infiltrating a roving gang of environmentally minded terrorists. Led by hunky Alexander Skarsgård, who spouts inane platitudes and occasionally removes his shirt, the group poisons pharmaceutical executives with their own toxic products and forces CEOs to swim in the waters they've polluted. Either out of a sudden crisis of conscience or a regular schoolgirl crush, Marling finds herself torn between the mission and the man, but there's no excuse for how slowly this all unfolds, devoid of humor and absent of a climax. What a snore. (Available via Video on Demand.)

Fast & Furious 6 ★★★ ½ Most movies are dumb, but very few are so smart about being so dumb. Up-and-coming indie director Justin Lin was brought on board to revive the sputtering Fast and Furious franchise for 2006's surprisingly sleek Tokyo Drift. Vin Diesel and Paul Walker had bailed for bigger and better things that never quite happened, only to return with their tails tucked between their legs after Lin took a page from late-1980s Hong Kong movies and turned this street-racing saga into soap-opera sprawl that more often than not feels like the best John Woo movies John Woo never made. Dripping with testosterone, kitschy machismo and unironic sincerity, these are bombastic pictures that go so far over the top that I don't think anybody involved even knows where the top is anymore. The latest pits our ever-expanding, unprecedentedly diverse cast against a sinister gang who are after something in a briefcase that nobody even bothers to explain. It's just a delivery system for expertly choreographed chase sequences and bare-knuckle brawls. Spectacular. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Frances Ha ★★★ There's probably no way to talk about writer/director Noah Baumbach's sixth theatrical feature without bringing up Lena Dunham's Girls, as both traverse the uncomfortable sexual exploits and financial free fall of a 20-something gal trying to make it in New York City. The TV show I am most tired of arguing about, Girls is a love-it-or-hate-it proposition (I happen to love it), and your tolerance for Frances Ha will probably be proportional to your patience for another flighty, emotionally bruised heroine making bad decisions while trying to stave off adulthood. Shot in shimmering black and white and loaded with references to the 1960s French New Wave, Frances Ha is sunnier and not nearly as icky as Girls. (Adam Driver appears in both, but he's way less creepy here.) Star Greta Gerwig (who co-wrote the film) plays Frances, an adorably graceless wannabe ballerina who feels abandoned as all her friends settle down into boring marriages and grown-up careers. Gerwig is a real movie star, handily carrying the familiar material. (At Kendall Square.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part III ★ ½ This grim, determinedly unpleasant threequel to 2009's surprise smash was a contractual obligation for all involved, and their contempt radiates from the screen in waves. The Hangover Part II was the kind of sequel that retroactively undoes your affection for the previous picture, whorishly recycling jokes and situations that were hilarious the first time around but now just feel like pandering. Part III doesn't even bother with jokes. It's a straight-up, sometimes shockingly violent action movie in which our returning wolf pack is kidnapped and forced at gunpoint to head back to Vegas and track down Ken Jeong's Asian minstrel. Bradley Cooper stands around shouting obscenities and complaining about how stupid the plot is, to a point where it doesn't feel like acting. Ed Helms all but disappears, and Zach Galifianakis has officially worn out his welcome. Director Todd Phillips stages the set pieces with a real visual brio, ignoring any pretense of comedy and treating the film like an audition reel for the next Die Hard movie. Everyone here, including the audience, would clearly rather be doing something else. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Iron Man 3 ★★★ In the awkward position of making both a sequel to a movie nobody liked (Iron Man 2) and one that everybody loved (The Avengers), director Shane Black and Robert Downey Jr. just split the difference and made Iron Man 3 a sort of sequel to their barely seen 2005 Kiss Kiss Bang Bang instead. This is a ripping little detective yarn, occasionally punctuated with obligatory soulless special effects sequences required by the genre. "I'm just a man in a can," Tony Stark sighs to lady love Pepper Potts (a game Gwyneth Paltrow). And the secret to Iron Man 3's success is keeping Downey out of that can for as much of the movie as possible. At the end of the day, Iron Man 3 is still a comic book blockbuster and thus needs to end with a patience-trying half-hour or so of flying, computer-generated robot suits blowing up a whole bunch of crap. But the smirky, sardonic sensibility smuggled in by Black is almost enough to cure the summertime blues. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Midnight's Children ★★ ½ Salman Rushdie's 1981 novel goes heavy duty on the allegories for some 500 pages, using the history of India as a template for an excessively complicated family drama spanning generations. This unwieldy film adaptation, co-scripted by the author, tries to cram it all into one movie, with results that are odd, endearing and ultimately exhausting. We have a character who can summon magical conclaves from within his oversized nose, and what comes after is a wacky, harebrained farce in which everybody has a lost love or a mistress. The over-complicated overlapping of who is still in love with who becomes so daunting, I didn't want to take notes so much as draw a flowchart. Meanwhile, this is all supposed to represent India and Pakistan, so wars keep breaking out. For about an hour, this is all terribly amusing. But there is nothing to hang onto here; most scenes last only two or three minutes, and events don't accrue so much as they just pig-pile on top of one another. (At Kendall Square.)

Olympus Has Fallen ★ ½ The second worst Die Hard movie of the year finds Gerard Butler playing a disgraced Secret Service agent who becomes our country's last hope after some nasty North Korean terrorists blow up most of Washington D.C. and hold the president (Aaron Eckhart) hostage in the White House bunker. A deliberate throwback to junky mid-'90s thrillers such as Air Force One and Executive Decision, Olympus Has Fallen severely misjudges the cheese-to-violence ratio, with Training Day director Antoine Fuqua lavishing his attention on innocents shredded by machine gun fire, cold-blooded executions and women being brutalized. It's hard to surrender to such a preposterous, cornball potboiler when your face is constantly rubbed in human suffering. Somebody also apparently miscalculated the budget, as this is the cheapest-looking movie in theaters right now. Bargain-basement CGI effects induce unintentional laughter, while the second half of the film is Gerard Butler skulking through dimly lit hallways. There are a lot of solemn patriotic platitudes, and Butler sticks his knife in people's skulls. Isn't crap like this supposed to be fun? (In the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper co-stars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Therapeutic Sounds

Originally a post-breakup solo project, Grizzly Bear was a therapeutic experiment turned indie-rock band that was intended to be shared with only a few close friends. But after an international tour, frontman Edward Droste now returns to his home state of Massachusetts, bandmates in tow. After capturing the attention of power couple Jay-Z and Beyoncé, receiving a fan endorsement from Ellen DeGeneres and writing a song on The Twilight Saga: New Moon soundtrack, the group recorded its most recent album, Shields, in Droste's family's cabin on the Cape. Bear witness to Droste's homecoming on June 8 at the Bank of America Pavilion.

Conflicts of Interest

Break With Tradition

Stephen Dupont has one well-worn passport. Having visited areas of conflict in Cambodia, Afghanistan, Cuba, India and beyond, the Australian photographer found his latest project in Papua New Guinea. The 2010 Gardner Photography Fellow, whose work has appeared in The New Yorker, Vanity Fair and Rolling Stone, spent six years documenting a culture that has more than 800 local languages. Papua New Guinea Portraits and Diaries examines the outside influences that are infiltrating ancient traditions—from Western clothes to the explosion of advertising—and celebrates the Melanesian people. Get lost in the distant islands through Sept. 2 at the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology.

girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

Once a Girl Scout, Always a Girl Scout

You were once a Girl Scout.

You hiked trails and camped out under the stars. You canvassed your neighborhood to sell Thin Mints. You honed your skills with each badge you earned. You learned to lead.

Each of us has memories to share. Reconnect with old friends, and support this new generation of girls.

You'll always be a Girl Scout.

Wild Side

Talk about unappetizing leftovers: Andrew Yancy's freezer contains the remains of a human arm. It was ostensibly detached in a boat wreck/shark attack, but the tale smells more than fishy to Yancy, who senses foul play. As expected, the plot of Carl Hiaasen's latest concoction, Bad Monkey, is a bit bananas. While Yancy, an ex-cop turned health inspector, attempts to solve a murder and return to the police force, Hiaasen introduces a wildly eclectic group of characters, including a kinky forensic pathologist and, of course, an impish primate. Go out on a limb and hear Hiaasen read from his tale at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on June 12.

6 FITNESS TIPS

TO GET INTO BETTER SHAPE BEFORE SUMMER

BY STEVE EDMOND

It's almost that time of the year again... SUMMER! Ditch that winter coat of body fat and get started now, following these steps to go from flab to FAB this summer:

INTERVAL TRAINING

Three times more effective than regular cardio, this activates fat burning hormones and boosts your metabolic rate. Keep the intensity high, start with 10 min warm ups, and never use weights right after.

SUPERSETS

Moving from one exercise to another with little or no rest between, this will optimize your fat burning capabilities. Do 10-20 reps of each exercise and complete each set for four times.

SPRINTS

Do 8 second sprints. After the first sequence, walk back to the starting position over 45 seconds, repeat and do this 10 times. For a challenge, try uphill sprints.

EAT TO GET LEAN

Eat six small meals per day, keep protein intake high and your carbohydrates in check. Include good fats, such as nuts/seeds, EVOO, coconut oil, lean beef, low-fat dairy and poultry.

DRINK PLENTY OF WATER

Substitute sugary drinks for eight or more 8-oz. glasses per day. Water helps your liver excrete waste products, focusing on burning stored fat for energy.

MORE SLEEP HELPS BURN FAT

Studies show too little sleep could affect your body's ability to burn fat. It is also easier to crave the wrong snacks in the middle of the night. Get at least 8.5 hours a night.

Follow these 6 simple steps, and be beach ready in no time. If you have any nutrition or exercise questions find me on Instagram, Twitter or Facebook at steveedmond1

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com]* Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

BITING COMMENTARY

We Take Care of Our Own

There's no more hugely charitable and fiercely clannish fraternity in Boston than the restaurant community, which organized an epic event, Boston Bites Back, to raise a minimum of $1 million for the One Fund.

Held at Fenway Park and hosted by celebrity chefs Ming Tsai and Ken Oringer, the event drew literally every top chef, philanthropist and foodie in town, among them: lovable funnyman Lenny Clarke, the stunning Gretchen Monahan and her soap opera star husband, Ricky Paull Goldin, PR guru Marlo Fogelman, car czar Herb Chambers and his son, George, the dapper David Drubner, shucker and jiver CJ Husk, the hale and hearty Greg Loeber with the radiant Stephanie, über Boston boosters Lynne and Gary Smith, blue-blooded rummy Andrew Cabot and the curiously tall Nelse Clark, and so on and so forth. More importantly in attendance, though, were some victims of the marathon bombings, first responders and medical personnel, who proved that no pathetic zealot can put a dent in this city's spirit.

Every inch of Fenway was filled with good food and goodwill, and anyone who went home hungry only had schmoozing to blame. As one guest put it: "There may be bigger cities than Boston, but none has a bigger heart."

Pretty in Pink

From Pepto-Bismol to bubble gum, pretty much every shade of pink was represented when the Breast Cancer Research Foundation hosted its annual Hot Pink Party at the InterContinental Boston.

This year's theme was "feathers, glitz and glam," and the high-octane crowd included the likes of cosmetics scion Leonard Lauder, Inside Edition kewpie doll Deborah Norville, TV anchor Kelley Tuthill, philanthropic fun couple Linda and Dan Waintrup, the toothsome twosome of Penelope Fireman and Ashley Bernon, the terrible twosome of Suhail Kwatra and Sal Malafronte, Palm Beach doyenne Sandy Krakoff, laugh riot Lynn Dale and her adoring other half, Frank Wisneski, the delightful Elisha Daniels (in a pink ostrich feather dress), man of the world Alex Leventhal, honorees Peter and Carolyn Lynch, bride-to-be Joanna Humphrey, redheaded siren Michelle O'Neil, hero and Patriot (in every sense of the word) Joe Andruzzi, the incomparable Jane Moss, yummy mummy Meredith Starr and one woman who said, "I might not be wearing pink, but I am wearing Wonder Woman underpants."

Cocktails and dinner were followed by a performance from the arrestingly beautiful hip-hop star Shea Rose, which prompted one guest to mutter, "This is more of a Tony Bennett crowd, but if you want to hire a rapper to entertain a roomful of 75-year-olds, be my guest."

Meanwhile, the award for quick recovery from foot-in-mouth disease went to the man who was introduced to a woman he already knew and said, "The Children's Museum in the window behind you makes you look so young I didn't recognize you."

Air Kisses Only

The horse-race scene in My Fair Lady has nothing on Party in the Park, the luncheon to benefit the Justine Mee Liff Fund of the Emerald Necklace Conservancy.

Familiarly known as "the hat party," it causes a noticeable uptick in the sale of elaborate hats, and it's held in a fantastically decorated tent on the Fenway. This year, even the heavily outnumbered men upped their game, sporting panamas, pork pies, fedoras, homburgs and, in one instance, a fierce-looking fascinator.

Seen sipping champagne at midday were such ladies who lunch, and the men who love them, as brunette bombshell Julie Hume Gordon, incorrigible scamp Krystian von Speidel, three of the Owens ladies—

> "I hate wearing hats. They make me look like a toadstool."

Biddy, Julia and Lizzie—with the dapper Bob, honorees Hizzonah Tom and Angela Menino, the comme il faut Wendy Shattuck, grande dame Holly Safford, Cambridge chatelaine RoAnn Costin, the indefatigable Janet Atkins, latter-day Louise Brooks Jane Roy, real estate mack daddy Norman Leventhal, fashion plate Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney, Our Lady of Chanel Mary Nobile King and every other boldface woman in Boston.

Unlike the delicious quail that was served as a main course, the witty persiflage was flying. Among the comments overheard:

"I hate wearing hats. They make me look like a toadstool."

"I'm hoping to get invited to a fancy English wedding so I can amortize the cost of this monstrosity on my head."

And: "I broke my leg at the Playboy mansion during a fundraiser for breast cancer," to which someone else responded, "How appropriate. I'm assuming there are lots of breasts there." ✖✖✖

Natural States

Adam DeTour

It was in a cow pasture in County Wicklow that I first heard the call of the wild. My ninth-grade buddies and I had borrowed a tent and set out to experience the natural world, meaning we wanted to ingest anything intoxicating in as dangerous a quantity as possible. We had not chosen our campground well. A herd of digestively violent Friesian cattle had transformed the field into a slick of listeria, and half the tent was soon aswim in bilge. Then there was the matter of the Irish rain. This took the form of clobbering slaps of frigid water, followed by spells of steady douse. But we had freedom, the roiling sky and the promise of communion with the infinite.

Of course, by sundown we'd gone feral. Prowling around a hissing fire of broken car seats and packing crates, we roasted empty beer cans and dared one another to step out of the circle of light to go pee on the electric fence. Pretty soon, someone got scared and called his mom to pick him up. It had taken us all of six hours to devolve from teenagers into Morlocks.

When you look at an ocean or an Alp, your spine gives a little shudder in acknowledgement of the sublime. Nature is the correct context for a human life to play out, and sometimes we need to lift our snouts from our iPad screens to remember it. But, as my 14-year-old self could attest, there's a lot to be said for civil engineering, disinfectant spray and decorum.

Berry Bold

GO AHEAD—BE picky. At Russell Orchards in Ipswich, it's encouraged. The 93-year-old orchard is a cornucopia during June's painfully short strawberry season until mid-October when branches ache with 10 varieties of apples. The farm's Strawberry Festival (June 22–23) marks the season's climax, tempting families out for hayrides, live music and tons of goods baked with the fruit.

To get the best berry for your buck, keep your pinching fingers at bay and rely on your eyes. "Color is really the best indicator of ripeness in a berry," advises co-owner Miranda Russell, who estimates that the 120-acre pick-your-own farm sees more than 100,000 visitors throughout the year as the shortcake topper gives way to raspberries, blueberries, cherries and blackberries in the later summer months.

The Russell family does their part to ensure a bountiful harvest, planting varieties that ripen throughout the season so that pickers aren't left empty (or tart) handed. As a result, their jeweled berries have drawn Hollywood notables Adam Sandler, Maya Rudolph and Salma Hayek to the farm. Gary Strack of Central Kitchen in Cambridge and chefs from Gloucester's the Market Restaurant and Duckworth's Bistro have been know to graze the fields for both business and pleasure. There's also an on-site bakery, and a winery that transforms the fruits into award-winning beverages—but that's another story altogether.

STEPHI STEPS OUT TO SOUTHIE

IF STEPHANIE SOKOLOVE'S restaurants were actresses, they'd be the pretty girl-next-door type: popping up in desirable neighborhoods, attracting a broad demographic and keeping up with—if not exactly setting—the trends. After Stephanie's on Newbury established itself as a mainstay, Sokolove ventured into the South End with Stephi's on Tremont. Now she's setting her sights on South Boston, planning to open Stephi's in Southie in late summer.

"We'd been looking in Southie for 18 months," she says. Eventually, a landlord offered her just the right spot, at the corner of West Broadway and Dorchester Avenue. "We'll bring a real liveliness to the neighborhood," she promises, with lots of shareable appetizers, a late-night menu and a 2 am liquor license, in addition to the usual Stephi's fare of upscale comfort food. And this probably won't be the last Stephi's, but don't hold your breath waiting for Stephi's in Suburbia. "We're really urban," Sokolove says.

It's finally official: Menotomy Grill & Tavern has opened in Arlington, featuring the town's only full-service liquor license, the cooking of Mark Thompson (former chef de cuisine at Chez Henri) and Andrew Lehman (formerly of Flora), and plenty of free parking.

---

Here's something unexpected: a waterfront restaurant on the South Shore that pledges to offer a menu "without the inclusion of any deep-fried foods." According to an ad placed on Craigslist, Crow's Landing, slated to open in Hingham in late summer, will "strike the appropriate balance between traditional comfort food and modern trends." In other words, the classic fried-clam dilemma—bellies or strips?—will be moot.

HAI TIME

Some 32 years ago, Doug Bacon sat at the bar of Our House on Comm. Ave., pint in hand as he watched the Eagles take on the Raiders in Super Bowl XV. Today his elbows lean on that same bar, though it's topped with a new black and red granite slab. There are other changes in the space as well, such as the four-foot-high gilded Buddha that sits behind the bar and the imported antique Chinese wooden doors, emblazoned with the double happiness symbol just inside the entrance. Bacon, too, has changed. No longer a patron, he now owns the restaurant, and in July he will relaunch the space as Shanghai Social Club.

"I have a personal connection to this space," Bacon says, "and I know the neighborhood very well." Shanghai Social Club is something different for Bacon—who also owns four other restaurant/bars nearby, including Harry's Bar & Grill, the White Horse Tavern and the Last Drop—and the area, which has an array of ethnic restaurants but few with full liquor licenses.

"I've recently come around to understanding how much more important food is than I originally believed," says Bacon, which is why he's brought on Bob Botchie (Myers + Chang, Erbaluce) as executive chef. The menu size is moderate, offering classic Chinese food and a few modern takes, such as the signature Shanghai spicy chicken with wok char and a scallop dish served with XO reduction (a fermented sauce made of dried shrimp and scallops), bok choy and a rice cake. Botchie also brings a selection of bao, including a cold Asian lobster roll, lion's head meatball (made with ground pork, ginger and scallions), spicy beef short rib, pork belly and—Botchie's personal favorite—a salt-and-pepper chicken skin bun. This is topped with a Chinese slaw of Napa cabbage, carrots and mushrooms and dressed with a yuzu vinaigrette.

Patrons can wash it down with one of the eight beers on tap, including Tsingtao, and a selection of classic Asian-inspired cocktails made with fresh juices. With a 2 am liquor license, Shanghai Social Club will serve food until at least 1 am, which Bacon hopes will give locals a better late-night option. "There are a lot of people in this neighborhood in their mid and late 20s and early 30s who have solid income, serious people [with] discerning tastes, looking for a better-quality experience," Bacon says. "And I'm hoping to give it to them."

TOUGH ACT TO FOLLOW

_House of Lies_' Elimu Nelson, who grew up in Milton, screens his new movie, _Things Never Said_, at the Roxbury International Film Festival on June 27.

In your upcoming film, Things Never Said, you play an abusive husband. Is it difficult to play a character who's disliked?

The whole thing about playing somebody who's "not liked" doesn't really bother me because I feel like every character should be played in a way that has a side that everyone can relate to. So, the thing about Ronnie is that it's easy to be like, "Oh, he's the abusive husband," but I feel like one of the best things about how people have received him is that they feel for him. They feel for him, they like him, they don't like him—they're kind of confused. He's multi-faceted in that way. So in that regard, it's a lot of fun to play a character like that.

What's the worst thing about going to an audition?

Sometimes you'll build it up in your head, and you'll get in there and you'll be perfect—they want somebody 6 foot, 3 inches, African-American, could play basketball, that whole thing. You'll get in there and then you'll see, like, Omar Epps walk in. And you're like, "Oh, s. Are you kidding me? I don't stand a chance."

You box four or five times a week. Have any techniques you've picked up in boxing carried over to acting?

Absolutely. I think a huge parallel between boxing and acting is that acting is a muscle, and in order to strengthen your muscle, you have to continuously use it. Be able to explore, fall on your face, get back up and just keep going. You have to have the technique correct. And eventually, you get in the ring, you put it to a test with sparring. You may have a game plan going in, but then you're reacting to what's happening. Same thing with acting. You're in a scene, you have an objective, you have all your emotional preparation, and you wind up just playing opposite this person. And you're having this tennis match, but you're inside the moment and you're moving and reacting truthfully.

How often do people mispronounce your name? [It's pronounced EE-LEE-MOO.]

[Laughs] I would say probably 85 to 90 percent of the time.

Drink of the Moment

FLOWER'S POWER

NAME: Black Dahlia

PRICE: $9

INGREDIENTS: Cranberry black tea vodka, lemon, house pomegranate grenadine

STORY: "It's a traditional Italian name for a mid-afternoon, evening drink," says Restaurant Dante beverage director Tom Tellier. He hesitates. "Well, it means a creature. Like a black widow spider. It's a calmer version of a threatening thing." So it tastes seductive and doesn't feel threatening. "But if you drink enough of them…"

FLAVOR: Opening notes are orange citrus, but you dive immediately into smooth tannins, buoyed by an acid flick of lemon. The iced tea character is predominant, but the tart cranberries mellow the grenadine's push into syrup. There's a nuanced balance of bitter and sweet, refreshment and edge. And while there's more than a suggestion of 80-proof Snapple, that's a good thing when you're sitting on the terrace, overlooking the river on a summer evening.

PROCEDURE: "We infuse vodka with black tea for about three hours, then 24 hours with cranberries."

CONTEXT: "The trend is going toward modified versions of classic cocktails," Tellier says. He emphasizes local ingredients, housemade syrups and juices, and simplicity. "Down to basics. Nothing with dry ice. People want it easy and fast; they don't want the bartender to be 'creative.'"

BLACK DAHLIA
Restaurant Dante, Royal Sonesta Hotel

PAIR IT WITH: Any of Dante's sfizi, but especially meatball or Italian sausage sliders.

ALTERNATES: The current sell-out is basil lemonade. ("We can't keep the infusion on the shelf.") Also, consider the blue margarita made with tequila infused with local blueberries and house orange liqueur.

Tails Up

Been to Belle Isle lately? You may not recognize it. Last November, the seafood shack known for its fresh fish and no-nonsense lobster roll moved across the bridge from East Boston to Winthrop, where it gained a liquor license, a killer view of the Boston skyline, outdoor seating and enough square footage to turn cartwheels. Even that lobster roll got an upgrade: For a cool $28, the new tail-meat-only option buys you half a pound of sweet, lightly mayoed meat that spills out the sides of its squishy griddled bun. Worthy of a summer splurge? We think so.

THROWING SHADE

TO GIANT UMBRELLA HOLDERS: Unless you are walking through the streets with your family of five on a rainy day, you do not need that massive beach umbrella. There are way too many 30- to 40-year-old men walking around with huge golf umbrellas. I shouldn't need to duck and cover when you stroll by!

Holding a regular umbrella

To the individual who whined about those who submit Impersonals: My recent submission was one of the ones cited in your rant. First of all, far be it from me to compare my "complaint" to the horrors of the world that you mentioned. Obviously, it is a very trivial matter in the scheme of things. The Impersonals column is a way for people to vent and for others to empathize with their stories (and perhaps get a laugh). I seriously doubt anyone complaining how a person dresses equates that to world poverty. As far as doing something nice for someone, I volunteer regularly, and have made donations to the One Fund and various other funds that have been established for the victims of the tragedy on 4/15. What have you done that's so great?

Good people can complain too

To the Debbie-downers of the world: We know that people don't have clean water and enough food and that women's lives are tough. WE KNOW! We know this because you tell us every time we want to complain about something in our lives, even if it's something silly. Life's short; stop being so grumpy!

Still going to complain about weird stuff

To Boston realtors: When you say that you will be showing my apartment from 2 to 3 pm, I make sure I'm gone during that time. But without fail you show up at 3:45 and wonder why I'm sitting on my couch. If you don't want me in my boxers watching TV, then show up on time.

Beauty

Head to Glow

With at-home tanners, we're bound to feel betrayed by streaks, splotches and orange palms befitting an Oompa Loompa. And while many products are marketed to either prevent or fix tanning tragedies, these DIY cures will cost you much less.

MADELEINE COLEMAN

To Prevent:

1. Make sure to exfoliate and shave or wax to create a smooth canvas.
2. Cover elbows, ankles and other creases in the skin with plenty of baby oil. "The oil acts as a barrier against buildup," says Susan Salemme, a Glow Beauty Boutique aesthetician.
3. Apply self-tanners with latex or plastic gloves to protect your hands and nails from pumpkin-hued discoloration.

To Correct:

1. "It sounds weird, but lightly wiping warm water and Comet helps blend your tanner. It's best for wrists, hands, feet and ankles," Salemme says.
2. Apply hydrogen peroxide to your streaks and creases, especially on hands and feet, to remove excess tanner.
3. Dab lemon wedges on a streaky area for two minutes; then lightly buff with a towel. The lemon's acidity will help hide that color calamity.

Warning: Randolph Engineering's aviator styles may cause you to incessantly hum "Danger Zone." Founded in 1972, RE, an eyewear company based in Randolph, received the U.S. Air Force as its first customer, long before Tom Cruise felt the need for speed. Civilians began purchasing their military-grade shades in the early '90s, and the company, still run by the same two families, now supplies shades to NASA shuttles, high-fashion runways and the faces of Jon Hamm, Johnny Depp and Bob Dylan. The company recently collaborated with designer Michael Bastian. "[We] discovered he had been buying our sunglasses for his runway shows for years and had worn our products since college," president and CEO Peter Waszkiewicz says. The sky's the limit when customizing the size, frames and lenses, so even though you may not have your pilot's license, you'll still look fly.

VIVE MA FRANCE

When Francois and Cécile Attard visited friends in the area, they decided to stay—and brought their French pantry with them. At their new Mass. Ave. storefront in Lexington, MA France, the shelves are stocked with cheeses (try the delicately tangy Picandou rounds), confitures, charcuterie and chocolates, as well as breads and pastries brought north daily from Pain D'Avignon. What you don't see, Francois can order through a very reliable source: his father, a food exporter who still lives across the pond.

Wine

The Chile Factor

I'm a big believer in Chile. Having visited the country four times—once as a wine judge, where I blind-tasted some 500 wines in four days—I can honestly say that I've never seen such perfect grape-growing conditions anywhere else. Sunny and dry, with cooling coastal breezes, Chile's top regions produce grapes that taste ripe and delicious, but not raisiny or overly sweet. The best thing about the wines: The incredible values. Unlike virtually anywhere else, in Chile vines can be planted directly in the soil without requiring any grafting onto rootstocks, so the cost of production is considerably less. Here are three high-value favorites.

CONO SUR "RESERVA ESPECIAL" SAUVIGNON BLANC CASABLANCA VALLEY, 2012
($14.99, wine.com)

The first winery to be certified with carbon-neutral delivery status, Cono Sur is dedicated to organic and biodynamic production, disciplines that are easier to maintain in Chile's arid climate. All of its wines share a purity of varietal expression, but this sauvignon blanc is really a knockout. Far less tropical than the typical New Zealand offering, it's lemony and crisp with hints of green herb and mineral. This delicate but fresh style is ideal with steamers or raw shellfish.

VIÑA ERRÁZURIZ "WILD FERMENT" CHARDONNAY CASABLANCA VALLEY, 2011
($18.99, Martignetti Liquors)

Errázuriz is a fifth-generation family producer that is renowned primarily for its red wines, but this chardonnay is something special. The "wild ferment" means that only natural yeasts are used to make this barrel-fermented estate wine. Produced in the cool, foggy Casablanca Valley, it has a grilled-nut, mushroomy aroma and is richly textured, but underscored with notes of citrus and green apple. It was a delicious accompaniment to a shrimp empanada I had recently with a salad of tomato, creamed corn and garden herbs.

SANTA RITA CARMENERE RESERVA RAPEL VALLEY, 2010
($13.99, Marty's Fine Wines)

When done right, Chile's signature grape variety can be velvety, smooth, ripe and just plain irresistible. Santa Rita gets it right, for a very modest cost. Carmenere is temperamental (which is why it no longer grows in Bordeaux) and requires a long growing season. If you haven't had it before, think merlot but fuller and spicier, without the fierce tannins of cabernet. Dark in color, with blueberry fruit tones and a clove-like, slightly chocolatey edge, this medium-bodied red is wonderful with grilled sausages or burgers.

A Fighting Chance

The rat race wasn't providing the right exercise for Brendan McKee: In 2009, he was pulling 15-hour days at a finance gig downtown—and feeling pulped by the daily grind. "My quality of life just diminished," McKee recalls. "I looked for an outlet." He found it in Brazilian jiu-jitsu, chronicling his training experiences in his Office to Octagon blog. After he teamed up with friend Brett Maloley, O2O evolved into a nonprofit aimed at combatting childhood obesity through fun, kid-friendly fitness programming. On June 22, its MMA Fight Night will have 18 local business pros squaring off at the Revere Hotel. Finally, a venue to watch financial executives get pummelled for charity! It's a catchy idea, and one that got us imagining our dream pairings in the octagon...

TERRY FRANCONA VS. TOM WERNER: The former Sox skipper took shots at plenty of people, but the most biting critique was saved for Sox chairman Werner. The sellout streak snapped early this year, but a pregame bout might boost attendance.

JAMES TAYLOR VS. STEVEN TYLER: How sweet it is... to kick your ass.

JACK PARKER VS. JERRY YORK: The legendary BU and BC hockey coaches always had an icy relationship.

MAYORAL ROYAL RUMBLE: If pro wrestling can have more than two contestants, why can't MMA? Put all 16 Menino wannabes in a ring and narrow it down from there.

NEW EDITION VS. NKOTB: Their voices may have dropped, but we're sure these groups have plenty of hits left in them.

Office to Octagon's charity fight night takes place at 8 pm on June 22 at Space 57 in the Revere Hotel. 200 Stuart St., Boston. officetooctagon.org. $100; $150, VIP. Proceeds benefit athletic programming for Boston youth.

IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF LOVE

A novel set in Boston's classical music world

DEEP, RESONANT MYSTERIES play underneath this musical novel. Composer and conductor Nicholas is happily married to Hazel; together they're the parents of Jessie. But a mentorship becomes something more when young second violinist Remy falls for the dashing Nicholas and steals him away. Colorfully and subtly, Kalotay follows this triangle.

Rejected Hazel develops a skin condition of white spots—a symptom of her loneliness. Jessie travels, quite successfully, between her two families. And an intense Israeli musician named Yoni has a complex relationship with Nicholas—involving affection and challenge, leading to romantic complications with Remy. Nicholas' new symphony, meanwhile, contains a violin section for her, and she crawls deep inside it, recognizing how embedded she is in Nicholas' music even as they diverge. And Nicholas' new "infidelity" involves cheating on classical music by salsa dancing on the sly.

Sight Reading
By Daphne Kalotay

Kalotay lives in Cambridge.

But it's the connection between Hazel and Remy, once rivals, that's the central theme. Over time, the scorned Hazel slowly, finally lands on the solid ground of remarriage and contentment. Throughout, Kalotay writes about music so you almost hear it. ×××

"You know what they say about stars in the sky," Lesser said, "that what we're seeing has already burned out by the time we see it? A star by the time we perceive it has already been shining, without our even being aware of it. Think of the melody as that star traveling along on a continuum, until it arrives in the first measures of your score. Only then does the listener finally hear it."

FEELING PEAKY

SOAR FEELINGS The Bascom Lodge offers recently renovated private rooms that retain a 1930s feel.

SOMETIMES OLD ADAGES ARE wrong. Sometimes the best is first, as in the case of Mount Greylock State Reservation, the first state-owned park and home to the highest point in the commonwealth.

Perched 3,491 feet above sea level, the 75-year-old Bascom Lodge is a hiker's haven at the summit of Mount Greylock. Resembling an old-fashioned stone and wood tavern, the lodge is open from June through mid-October and annually welcomes between 125,000 and 175,000 people—trekkers on the Appalachian Trail, day hikers, groups of cyclists and locals who simply drive up the eight-mile stretch of newly paved road for the view from the dining room. A lobby fireplace offers a warm spot to dry clothes and shoes after a day of hiking, as well as a chance to swap stories with other guests or curl up on one of the oversized chairs and read a book. An enclosed porch in the back of the lodge boasts impressive views and, on certain nights, from 5 to 7 pm, cocktails at the picnic tables.

The 7 pm dinner—reservations required—has become the lodge's calling card since brothers John and Peter Dudek and business partner Brad Parsons began leasing the lodge from the state in 2009. Diners share spots at the lodge's original tables (the chairs were used for firewood during World War II), but the menu isn't cafeteria fare. While the string of environmental nonprofits that previously operated the space served up processed or deep-fried fodder, John Dudek, a native of Adams, spent more than 25 years cooking at New York restaurants, including a long stretch at once-revered, now-shuttered Hubert's, where he cooked alongside Jacques Pépin, and has cooked for Julia Child and James Beard. His prix fixe menus include entrees like roasted Cornish game hen and swordfish puttanesca, while dessert might feature Parsons' homemade passion fruit and clove ice cream. But the main attraction isn't on the table. It's the spectacular vista you see when you look up from your plate.

Overnighting at the lodge feels a lot like summer camp, except without the requirement to unfurl a sleeping bag. There are private rooms, or you can bunk in a coed dormitory that sleeps 10. For Appalachian Trail hikers, it's a civilized luxury after nights of camping outside. In keeping with the rustic vibe, there are shared bathrooms and no televisions to distract from the quiet. The private rooms are small, having been designed in the 1930s, but they've been updated with new but Spartan furnishings, and wallpaper that harkens back to when the Civilian Conservation Corps built the lodge during the Great Depression. It's all the more reason to head outside to the dozens of trails on the mountain.

While the nearby War Memorial Tower is closed to climbers until next year because of renovations, you can set out on the well-trodden Appalachian Trail or, for a shorter trek, head down the Overlook Trail and loop onto the Hopper Trail to get back to the lodge. Taking less than two hours to complete, it's still a challenge with its tangled roots and jagged rock.

If the rain washes out your visit, drive down the mountain to Williamstown. The Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute is in the midst of a five-year renovation, but you can still see works by Monet, Manet, Rodin, Renoir and Van Gogh, as well as a current Winslow Homer exhibit. Nearby, the Williams College Museum of Art showcases a more eclectic mix. On your way back up Mount Greylock, find your own inspiration at the numerous scenic overlooks. Then take in the sunset from the summit and consider how crowded the Appalachian Trail would be if more lodges like this crowned the mountaintops. Lucky that this place is one of a kind. ×××

NOTHING MUCH

Much Ado About Nothing ★½☆☆
Starring Amy Acker, Alexis Denisof, Fran Kranz, Jillian Morgese, Clark Gregg and Nathan Fillion. Screenplay by Joss Whedon, based on the play by William Shakespeare. Directed by Joss Whedon. At Kendall Square.

AS FAR AS CULT FOLLOWINGS go, you'll find none friendlier than the Whedonites. Cheerful, fanatical devotees of television impresario Joss Whedon will kindly offer DVD box sets of Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Firefly or Dollhouse in the same uninitiated way as Jehovah's Witnesses hand out issues of The Watchtower. Actually, I used to live downstairs from a woman who identified herself as one of Firefly's "Browncoats," and she often spoke longingly of gatherings where hundreds would dress in costume and sing the canceled show's theme song.

I'm told there are a disproportionate number of Whedonites in the Boston area, and they're a vital force in our city's repertory film scene, keeping the Brattle and the Coolidge humming through countless late-night screenings of Whedon projects such as Serenity, Dr. Horrible's Sing-Along Blog and that Buffy musical episode I never did get around to watching, despite the ardent pleas of my aforementioned former upstairs neighbor and at least two ex-girlfriends.

I don't want to sound like a jerk about this, as they all seem like awfully nice people, far less snooty and more inclusive than most modern fan bases. And Whedon does know his way around a wisecrack. His snappy group dynamics were a real boon to that directing gig on a low-budget independent movie last summer called The Avengers.

But unfortunately I'm still a skeptic in all forms of worship that don't involve my own personal deities Bruce Springsteen and Marvin Gaye. Which brings us to Much Ado About Nothing, a larky little Shakespeare adaptation whipped up by Whedon and his regular TV stock company during a 12-day break after principal photography on Marvel's magnum opus. It's literally a home movie, since Much Ado was filmed in Whedon's house. The spirit is commendable; why not unwind from the stresses of a massive blockbuster shoot by inviting all your old friends over to riff on the Bard of Avon's funniest play?

Problem is, it's a terrible movie.

Problem is, it's a terrible movie. Indifferently photographed on smeary, consumer-grade black-and-white digital video, Much Ado shovels mass quantities of iambic pentameter into the mouths of untrained third-string television actors, most of whom appear to have learned their lines phonetically. Not since Baz Luhrmann's Romeo + Juliet have I been so convinced that most of the cast had no idea what they were saying. Half of these folks might as well have been speaking Klingon.

For those who either flunked freshman literature or missed Kenneth Branagh and Emma Thompson's sparkling 1993 big-screen adaptation, Much Ado About Nothing is a featherweight romp of musical beds and mixed-up identities, with the "merry war" between proto-screwball stars Beatrice (nicely played by Amy Acker) and Benedick (the horrific Alexis Denisof), who banter in a bickering animosity that can only mean true love. There's also some gnarly business by the king's dastardly bastard brother trying to convince everybody that his rival's new bride is a skank.

Set in present day with all the king's men donning sleek Secret Service uniforms, Whedon's Much Ado doesn't do much with the modern update, and fouls the nest at the outset with a wordless prologue suggesting Beatrice and Benedick's rivalry is the result of a bungled one-night stand. Whedon packs the crowded frames with ill-timed pratfalls, constantly attempting everything he can to distract from the pleasures of the text. It's all buffoonish clowning around, sexy-time pantomimes and drunken dances. The barn-door-sized performance by Denisof might be my new least favorite thing ever. I kept waiting for him to slip on a banana peel.

Much Ado About Nothing is being released by Roadside Attractions, a boutique indie distributor that's having a little-engine-that-could blockbuster summer thanks to the excellent coming-of-age drama Mud and Sarah Polley's narcissistic family-therapy documentary Stories We Tell. Sadly, you didn't get to read about those pictures here because their local publicist doesn't think much of our magazine, leaving me to fend for myself and catch up with these movies after release and too late for review.

But those wonderful folks at the Independent Film Festival Boston were kind enough to secure me a seat for Much Ado's area premiere back in April. And so I found myself surrounded by 800 cheering, rapturous Whedonites, all of whom had been waiting in line for several hours and once again were the friendliest, most courteous people I have ever encountered at such a crowded screening. (Take that, Sundance.)

Alone in my displeasure, feeling like the world's biggest spoilsport, I realized this movie is a party. Except that I wasn't invited. It's a private party, for fans only. ×××

CHRIS BROKAW HESITATES, realizing that it sounds strange for him to compare playing with Boston-born rockers Come—reunited to tour behind the reissue of the band's 1992 debut, Eleven: Eleven—to performing classical music.

"You're performing something that was written a while ago and just performing it correctly, with respect to the original intent," says Brokaw, who formed Come with fellow guitarist and vocalist Thalia Zedek to delve into raw, bluesy rock 'n' roll like the Rolling Stones and the Gun Club.

It was a novel idea, given that Zedek came from post-punk abstractionists Live Skull and Uzi, and Brokaw drummed for slow-core pioneers Codeine, as grunge and industrial rock exploded around them.

"We were trying to carry ourselves with a certain amount of dignity," Brokaw says from his home in Seattle, distancing Come from that era's bratty rockers as well as darker outfits like Alice in Chains or Nine Inch Nails. "Everything those bands were doing seemed to be almost cartoonish in the way that they were putting across dark emotions," he says. "Everything we were doing was more subtle than that. I didn't think, 'We're going to sell it to those people.'"

Come nonetheless won the support of Nirvana, Sugar and Dinosaur Jr., who all took the Boston combo on the road. Subtleties aside, Eleven: Eleven still walloped, led by lacerating dual guitars as well as the haunted howl of Zedek, whose influences include Patti Smith and Nick Cave.

"I think we were a bit too dark and abrasive for 'mass consumption,'" Zedek offered by e-mail from Spain, where she was supporting her latest solo album, Via, after Come wrapped up a European swing. "But we weren't about to change our style in order to be more popular."

> "I think we were a bit too dark and abrasive for 'mass consumption.'"

Eleven: Eleven reflects a rough period for Zedek in New York City, where she dealt with both the dissolution of Live Skull and heroin addiction. "I had just come through the other side of a serious drug problem and was looking back on the wreckage," the Allston resident said. "A lot of my friends were in similar situations, some not as lucky as me in their recovery, and I was writing about that a lot. That's a part of my life that feels quite far away from me now, and I'm very grateful for that."

Far away indeed, as Come hits the Sinclair on June 27 to celebrate the 20th-anniversary reissue of Eleven: Eleven, which was out of print for nearly a decade. The remastered album sounds both brutal and beautiful, from slowly flogged tempos that surge into whiplash turns on "Dead Molly" to the ruminative ballad "Sad Eyes." And it's accompanied by a crisp 1992 live set from Vermont that Brokaw calls a "typically unhinged-sounding performance, so I'm happy for that."

Rounded out by drummer Arthur Johnson and bassist Sean O'Brien, the original lineup of Come laid the seeds for its songwriting in rehearsal jams, Brokaw says. He credits those long hours for tightening the group's chemistry and greasing the wheels for today's note-for-note revival.

Zedek, 51, and Brokaw, 48, both use the word "natural" to describe playing with the original lineup, which reunited in 2010 for its first shows in 15 years. "It's felt really easy and pretty effortless considering how much time has passed," Zedek said of what she now calls Come's "occasional jaunt."

Come continued for several years after Johnson and O'Brien left, before disbanding in 2001, but Brokaw considers its first lineup the best. "The style and physicality of Arthur's drumming and the way he'd give and take with the tempo was a huge part of the way the band sounded and felt," Brokaw says. "And Sean's playing had this stealthy feel under everything that was crucial to the way everything came across."

That's still there, along with the discordant guitar weave of Zedek and Brokaw, who sometimes wields a mean slide. "We immediately had a really great rapport as players," he says, suggesting that the closest parallel was how Keith Richards and Ron Wood blended lead and rhythm duties in the late-'70s Stones. "It's the most interesting and exciting collaboration that I've ever had." ×××

BAD CALLS

So the NSA wants to read my Verizon records

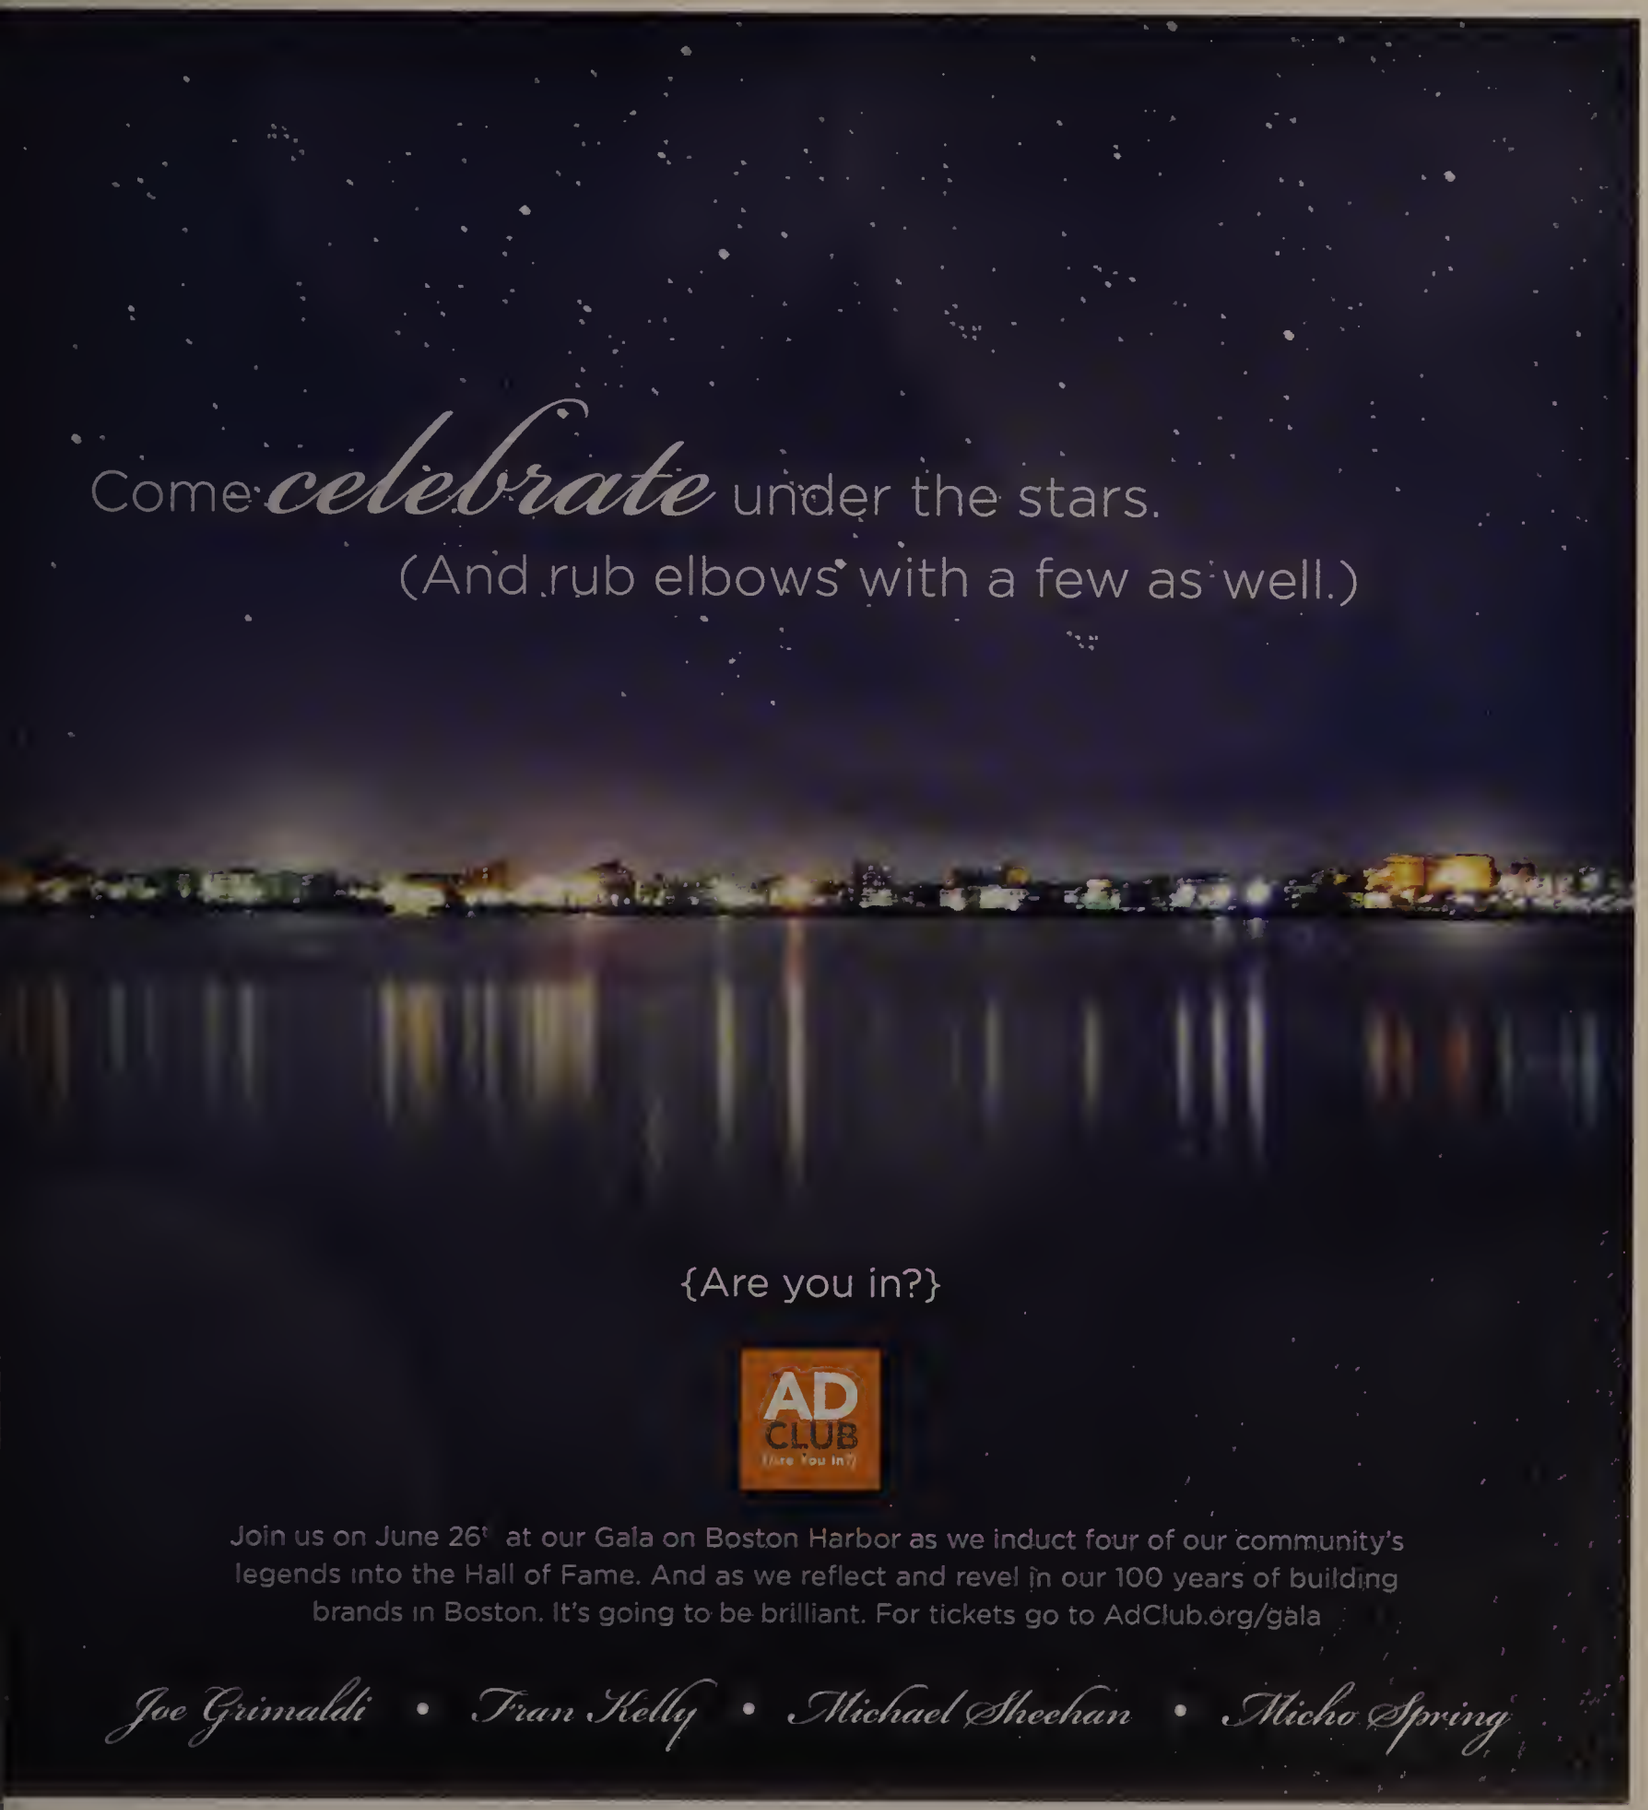
AS YOU MAY HAVE HEARD, the government's been getting extra nosy lately. It was alarming enough when the Justice Department demanded the phone records for AP reporters, but the latest revelation goes quite a bit further than that. Since I'm a Verizon customer, I am one of the millions of people whose phone records were turned over to the National Security Agency.

As a law-abiding American citizen, I find the NSA phone revelations deeply, deeply... flattering! The government is spying on little ol' me? I feel like when Bugs Bunny is dressed up as a lady and blushing at the attentions of Yosemite Sam. I know that's a cliché thing to say about the Patriot Act.

Because I want to save some taxpayer money, let's just go over my phone bill and explain a few recent calls that may have seemed a little shady.

First of all, that call to Turkey was a wrong number. I meant to order a turkey, for Thanksgiving, because if you wait till the last minute you get a mediocre third-string turkey instead of a plump champion gobbler. I don't want the Jason Collins of turkeys on my table. And I don't mean that in the sense that I don't want a gay turkey. I'd be perfectly happy having a gay turkey for Thanksgiving, and statistically speaking, I probably already have. I'm saying I want a turkey who's a starter and gets me a clean double-double and solid minutes with no foul trouble. Get it? Fowl trouble? You guys should try actually listening to my conversations.

Now, that call to Gillette headquarters, I know what you're thinking: He must be mad at Gillette because he wants everyone to have beards and Gillette is a world-class enabler of beardlessness. But that wasn't it at all. I was just prank-calling them. Sometimes I like to settle in for the night, drink some mouthwash, call Gillette and ask for Oliver Bush. (First name Adolph.) Is that a crime? Not where I come from, which is a little place called America. Western Hemisphere. Earth. Look it up, desk jockeys.



This next one, OK, funny story. Yes, I called Russia. Specifically, I called Vladimir Putin. It was a butt dial. But then the funny thing is, after that he must've had my number in his phone, because then he butt-dialed me. Which I didn't even realize till I got this long voicemail that sounded like someone playing polo inside a nuclear submarine. Which is exactly what it was! Right at the end of the message, you hear him grab his phone and say, "Great, I butt-dialed from my polo horse inside this nuclear submarine. I'm so bad with technology!" Why was he speaking English? You'll have to ask him.

Moving down the list, I can see why you'd be interested in that call to North Korea. Well, I was trying to find out if they'd finished that big hotel they've been working on, because it's a little-known clause of the Marriott Rewards program that you get double bonus credit toward Lifetime Platinum Elite status if you spend at least three nights at the Ryugyong Hotel in Pyongyang. But to do that, the hotel would need to be open. And darn it if I couldn't get a straight answer on that. It was all, "Yes, it's the most glorious structure yet envisioned by mankind. Dear Leader built it himself in a single day, and the Manager's Cocktail Reception from five to seven each evening is not to be missed. Literally, if you miss it, very bad things will happen!" But then I'd try to make a reservation, and they'd say the only wing with any vacancies was under construction and they didn't want to book me there because I might complain on TripAdvisor. Long story short, I'm stuck on Gold Elite status.

On the topic of the call to Venezuela, I think you're confused. What happened is, I called Fernando Valenzuela. I have a small side business in sports management, and I thought, "Who better to promote El Toro tequila than El Toro himself, Fernando Valenzuela?" But he couldn't get over the fact that the bottle's cap is a little sombrero. He thought it was silly and wanted them to change it, but I was like, "Fernando, the sombrero is the only reason people buy El Toro. We're not talking Sauza Hornitos here, but we'll work up to that." But he wouldn't do it. You know that even though he was a pitcher, he batted .368 as a pinch hitter? We shall not see the likes of him again.

So, that's it. I hope you're satisfied that Verizon customers like myself are patriotic, law-abiding citizens. Nothing like those sickos over at AT&T. ×××

Soroff On MEREDITH HAGNER

The sitcom actress tells us about country music, soap opera dialogue and make-out scenes.

MEREDITH HAGNER, 26, STARS IN THE TBS HIT COMEDY Men at Work. Originally from Chapel Hill, NC, Hagner studied at the Boston Conservatory before moving to New York. Her first TV role was on As the World Turns, for which she was nominated for an Emmy. She also appeared in The Following, CSI: Miami and In Plain Sight. On the big screen, she recently completed the indie movie Any Tom, Dick or Harry, and she has appeared in Going the Distance, Art Machine and Damsels in Distress. Active in the New York indie-rock scene, she sings, plays guitar and writes music, and is deeply involved with the Special Olympics.

Jonathan Soroff: Biggest thing you learned at the Boston Conservatory?
Meredith Hagner: Well, to be my own person. That was the first time I was away from home and surrounded by creative, interesting musical people. I felt like I'd found like-minded souls.

Thing you miss the most about Boston?
Just how gorgeous the architecture is. I walked everywhere and loved how each neighborhood had its own energy. It's just such a beautiful city.

Worst ad you ever starred in?
One of my first gigs was an Acuvue contact lens commercial. I was so excited. And the day before I did it, I got a sty. You can't really do a contact commercial with a swollen red eye. The poor director was just getting me from one side. I don't even think it ever aired.

Biggest lie you ever told to get an acting job?
Well, you really want the job, so you just say, "Yup! I can!" to anything. One time, I said that I could do martial arts. And I did do a little bit when I was younger. Then you actually go to the call, and they expect you to be Michelle Yeoh. I think they said something along the lines of "We're going to go in a different direction."

Are soap opera fans complete whack jobs?
No. I'm a massive fan of Breaking Bad, to the point where if I met any of those actors, I would have a difficult time. So I understand the psychology behind being a fan, and all the fans that I came into contact with were lovely. It makes you feel like what you're doing is being seen and appreciated, which is nice.

Ever have a weird fan encounter?
There was one time when someone got upset at me in person about something my character had done. I was like, "I'm so sorry. I know! It was a terrible thing to do. Totally out of line!"

Best part of doing a soap opera?
It's amazing training. There's a lack of preciousness to it that's really fun. It was an opportunity to play and explore and do things you've never thought of. I also got to work with such an amazing group of actors.

Are you still friends with them?
A lot of them are some of my closest friends, and I love watching their progress. Last night, I did karaoke with Vanessa Ray.

Most pages of dialogue you had to memorize?
There was a eulogy once that was tough. But there are days like that on a soap opera, and it's a gift when they give you that much material.

Worst part of doing a soap?
My skin really didn't love the makeup. But one of my favorite things about it was also the hardest thing about it, which is the pacing. Sometimes, it was so fast it was painful, but as an actor, it's a real gift to have that experience.

Are you good at giving relationship advice?
Well, I feel very cautious about giving advice. I'd rather hear it from someone who's older and wiser and has more experience. I'm better at listening than at telling people what to do.

Role you'd die for?
Oh, man. I sing and play music, and my grandmother was a country-western singer. So every time I see Walk the Line, I see Reese Witherspoon's stunning performance and think, "Gosh, what an amazing experience to explore that character." That was amazing.

Fantasy love scene partner?
Well, sex scenes are one of the more uncomfortable things any actor has to do, so anyone who finds that truly pleasurable, that's sort of hard to believe. But for a make-out scene? I'll be like every cliché girl and say Ryan Gosling. And now I sound like a stalker.

Top three bands you're listening to right now?
Well, my friend's band is amazing. Elizabeth and the Catapult. I love them. Blake Mills is amazing. And let's see... I've been listening to a lot of Dr. Dog.

What would I be surprised to find on your iPod?
Well, I can definitely geek out to some musical theater, but I'm not sure how surprising that is. I really like a lot of bluegrass and zydeco. And Elizabeth Cotten, who was an amazing folk singer.

Would you ever leave acting for music?
Acting is something I've always felt I had to do. Music is something that I just enjoy and is cathartic and fun. I don't think I'd leave one for the other.

Guilty pleasures on TV?
I really limit myself, because I will go down that path. I don't watch much TV because I get so engrossed. I once watched an entire season of The Bachelor on my laptop, and by the end of the night, there was a carton of Chinese food in front of me. I hit rock bottom really easily with that.

So do you know that your feet are on WikiFeet and were rated beautiful?
Are you kidding? That's so bizarre, because my feet grew faster than the rest of me. I remember that first pool party in sixth grade that was so traumatic, because boys and girls are actually hanging out together. And some guy yelled across the pool, "Hey flipper feet!" I jumped into the pool just to hide them.

Best actor you've ever worked with?
Kevin Bacon.

So when do you think you'll win an Oscar?
I just hope I continue to grow as an actor and get amazing, interesting opportunities. ×××

DARK NIGHT RISES

BY MILES HOWARD
ILLUSTRATIONS BY DANIEL FISHEL

I have a habit of embracing enterprises that would scare away most sensible people. Once I attended a high school Halloween function dolled up as a Kabuki dancer. While finishing college in California and seeking literary inspiration, I auditioned to be an extra in a soft-core porn flick set on an airplane. And most recently, I did something I had only read about in outdoor-recreation magazines laden with veiny fitness models—the kind whose impossibly chiseled bodies seem to say, "I can dead lift a Buick."

I decided to go night hiking.

Now, when I say "night hiking," I don't mean stargazing in the Arnold Arboretum. I want you to picture climbing a hulking skin-your-knee mountain in total darkness. For some people, the challenge holds an irresistible draw. "Night hiking feels mysterious, even daunting," says George Heinrichs, a member and former employee of the Appalachian Mountain Club, which leads guided night hikes for novices. "On past outings, I've seen moose, bears, skunks, and coyotes, but rarely any other people." This intrigued me. Despite years of hiking throughout New England, I had never laid eyes on a moose that wasn't stuffed. The promise of solitude appealed, too. If you know what it feels like to be ambling across a mountain ridgeline, enjoying the sun on your face, only to be jerked from your private reverie by a nearby troop of Boy Scouts hurling rocks at birds or engaging in actual pissing contests from the highest cliff, you understand the relative beauty of silence.

It might sound like madness—especially in light of recent headlines about hallucinating hikers lost for days—but I was bored and in desperate need of an adventure. I had spent most of the previous year working at a big city magazine, emailing publicists and producing copy about a lavish lifestyle I was nowhere close to affording. I wanted tales of recklessness to counteract the effects of the 9-to-5 grind, some new nerve-jangling stories that I could whip out at parties. I wanted to be the sort of guy who fielded questions like "You caught a salmon with your bare hands?" or "Do you want to go someplace quiet?"

So one weekend, I filled a backpack with rain gear, long underwear and protein bars. I bought extra batteries for my headlamp. I told people where I was going, and where to send a search party if I didn't return after two days. My destination was the mighty Presidential Range of New Hampshire. Between dusk and dawn, I was going to hike 18 rocky miles up and over nine peaks exceeding 4,000 feet in elevation. One of them was Mount Washington, the highest heap of granite in New England.

The drive up from Boston alone was the most exciting thing I had done in months. Watching cars zip through the fading sunlight, I felt my brain buzzing. Most of the drivers tailgating me in the exit lane would be asleep in their beds soon. While they snored, I'd be sitting on an angled ridge, admiring star maps.

Sure enough, the night sky was cloudless when I finally pulled into the parking lot for the trail. My battered Subaru was the only vehicle in sight. As I locked the doors, crickets chirped nearby and small sets of eyes glimmered in the undergrowth.

It was 7 pm. I was on my way.

The woods were silent, save for the occasional hand of wind sweeping through branches. For two hours, I climbed a rooty, meandering trail called the Valley Way. The beam of my headlamp cut through the darkness so intensely that I assumed any living creatures within a six-mile radius had already bolted for Vermont. Yet to my surprise, I happened upon a rare forest resident only moments later: a weasel-like creature known as the pine marten. It stood on its haunches for several seconds, regarding me with a skeptical squint, as if one of us had just broken wind. I hadn't even made a sound—just moved my jaw a bit—when the little guy gave a shriek and disappeared noisily into the bushes.

I kept climbing.

In daylight, the long ascent to the alpine zone—a treeless moonscape of rock—would have left me wheezing and steaming. One of the unexpected perks of climbing in the dark was my limited vision. I could only see 15 feet of trail before me, which spared me the perennial despair of pulling myself over what surely must be the summit, only to find more granite stairs ahead. When I eventually broke through the tree line, onto the sweeping slopes of Mount Adams, I was breathing with the self-assurance of a yoga instructor. Then I turned around, and my breathing stopped.

I had never seen a landscape with the depth, the color, the clarity of the mountains and valleys below. The moon lit up the land with such shades of violet that my headlamp became superfluous. Far away, little towns glowed like model villages. And beyond them, on the horizon, was a band of blue light running as far as the eye could see, east to west. Was it the early rays of dawn? Had some nearby power plant suffered a gas leak? Either way, I was too enamored to care.

Moments later, as the trail descended into a pocket of trees, I suddenly felt a sharp, burning pain on the back of my left heel, like a knife carving into bone. Stricken, I sat down on a mossy mound and pulled my boot off to reveal a sac of fluid as big as a silver dollar bulging from my heel. It was the kind of inexplicable injury that makes you wonder if long-forgotten sins—say, placing gum in your sister's hair during a long car ride to Quebec—are finally being addressed by some omniscient power. I couldn't understand how I'd managed to walk this far without feeling my heel skin being rubbed raw.

Before I could decide whether to pop the blister, a new sensation commanded my attention: a tickling around the upper thighs, and then, a red-hot pinch. I leapt up and aimed my headlamp where I had been sitting. To my horror, it was teeming with spiders. The tiny black things were swarming. I whimpered and slapped furiously at my legs, hoping to knock any clinging arachnids into oblivion before they could reach my reproductive organs.

What happened next still strikes me as comically improbable. As I brushed spiders away, I heard the sound of large feet thumping down the trail in my direction. Moose, I thought, both excited and unsure of what I'd do if it charged at me. Branches smacked against whatever was coming, and I stood to greet it.

INSTEAD of an antlered creature, a gangly man emerged from the trees.

"Hi," he said, pronouncing the word in two syllables. "I'm Checkers. What's up?"

"Checkers" must have been at least 35, and looked like he weighed that much. You could see the bones of his skull. Scraggly hairs sprouted from his chin, and he wore an enormous military-issue backpack that appeared to have survived sustained tours of duty. As I tried to explain the situation, he kept shaking his head, as if shooing a stubborn horsefly away.

"Lemme have a look at that foot," he offered, dropping his pack to the ground.

"Oh, I'll survive," I said, thinking, will I? What's this guy doing out here in the middle of the night? Of course, Checkers could have asked the same thing about me, but there was something about his rigid, alert manner that unsettled me. Or maybe it was the enormous sheathed bowie knife hanging from his belt. For one terrifying moment, I was afraid he would remove it and attempt a DIY fix on my blister.

"You gotta pop that motherfer," Checkers said, reaching a sinewy hand into his pack. "I got a first-aid kit. Swab some alcohol on there."

I was embarrassed to have neglected to bring my own bacitracin. What the hell, I eventually thought. Even if he pulls the knife out, I can't run in my current condition anyway.

"Really? Would you mind if I borrowed some ointment, then?" I asked cordially.

"Help yourself," Checkers said with a grin, tossing a zipper pouch my way. After two painful minutes, my blister was drained and bandaged; I could fit my foot in the boot again. The heel still stung, but it was a tolerable pain.

From there, Checkers (I never learned his real name) attached himself to my hip. But he turned out to be an entertaining conversationalist. As we climbed the cone of Mount Washington at 2 am, I was no longer admiring the night sky but listening to Checkers rant about the Orwellian rise of government and his plans for a one-man revolution. They mostly involved burning down post offices during closed hours, and then building an ideological following from prison. I nodded and occasionally offered a thoughtful "mm-hmm" or "interesting," deciding it would be best not to ask if this would be Checkers' first stint behind bars.

Strange as it sounds, while hiking along the ridge with this potential madman, my happiness peaked. You couldn't plan an encounter like this. In one moment, the nature of my adventure had transformed from simply hiking under the stars to enjoying the company of a warmhearted lunatic. I never let my guard down entirely, eyeing possible escape trails in case some fuse blew in Checkers' brain. But I savored every moment of our hike—right up to a scarlet 6 am sunrise on Mount Jackson—and refused to view the trip as compromised.

Because really, what's more adventurous than welcoming whatever—or whoever—the dark throws at you? ✖✖✖

FEST INTENTIONS

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

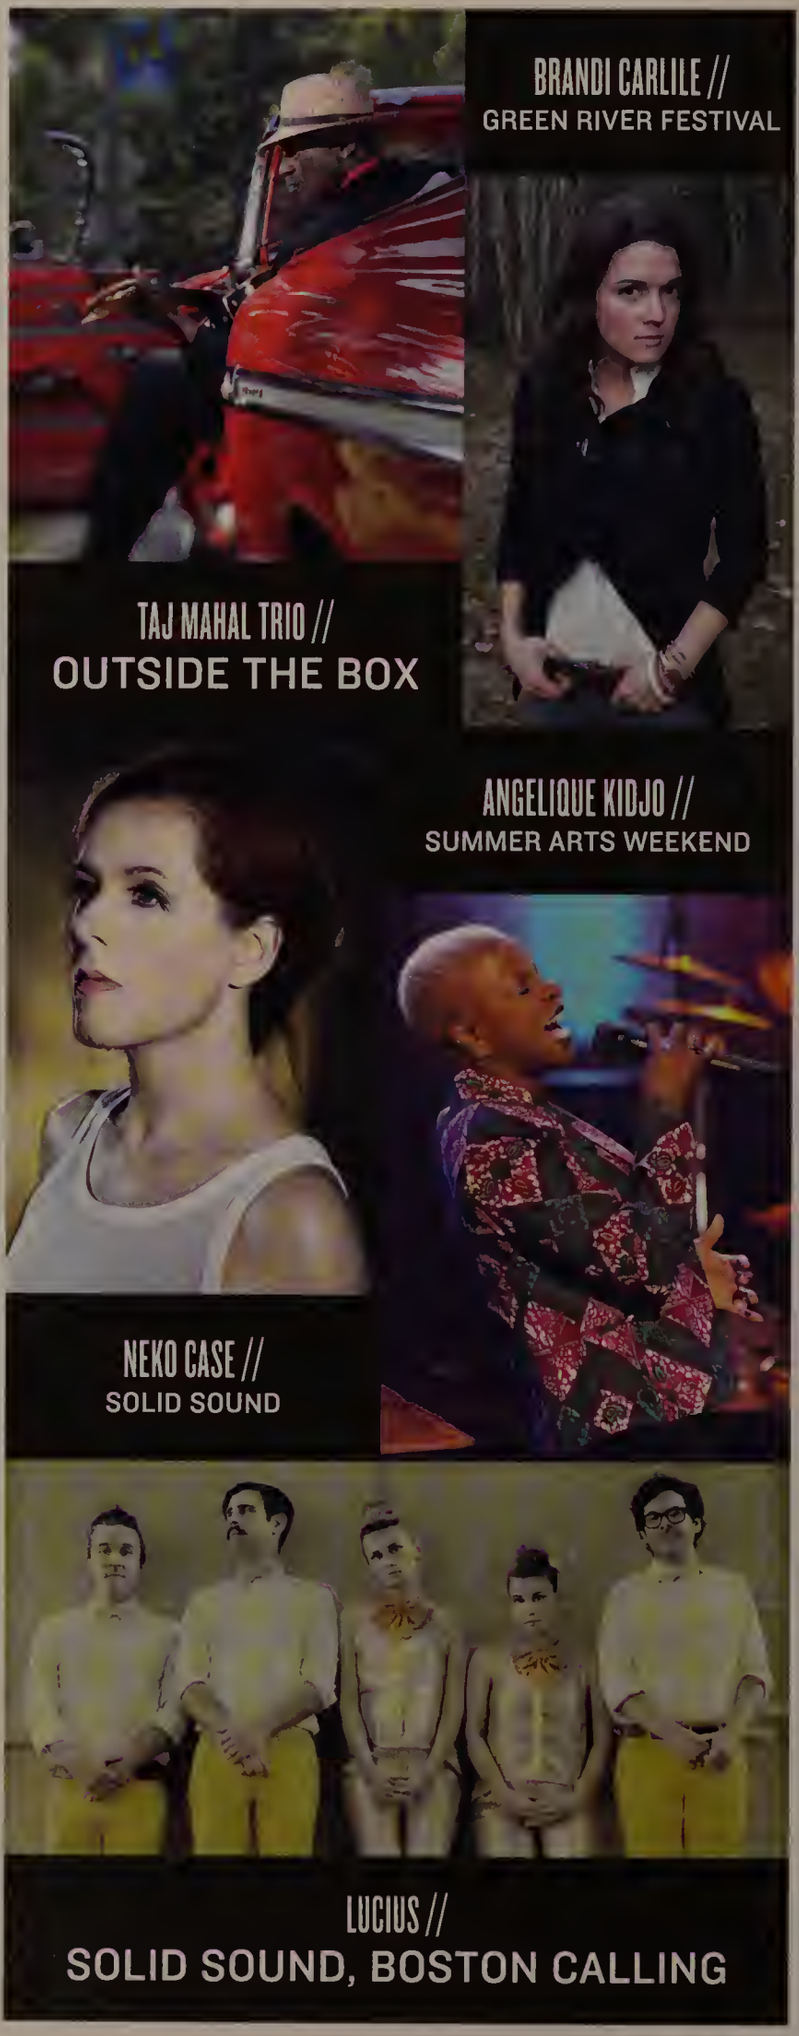
All of a sudden, Boston's become a city of music festivals.



"Boston" and "music festival" aren't words that usually go together, but that's changing big-time. New England has exploded with festivals in recent years, and this is the summer that Boston joins the crowd.

Boston Calling fired the first shot over Memorial Day weekend, bringing national rock acts to City Hall Plaza, and that ticketed bonanza will do it again Sept. 7-8. Two free in-town fests also make their mark in July, the ambitious nine-day bash Outside the Box and Summer Arts Weekend. Add in the Nines, a one-day August enterprise debuting about an hour from Boston at the former Fort Devens. Then there are the major fests worth the longer drive, most notably Newport Folk and Jazz, Gathering of the Vibes and Solid Sound. They're all putting New England on the map with world-class musical artists.

"You've got an interesting little era of festivals," says Chris Colbourn, who is playing Outside the Box as the bassist/singer for rockers Buffalo Tom and also books pop, blues and world music internationally for local agency Concerted Efforts. Children today are exposed to wider musical styles, he says, and their parents are more interested in festivals. "Boston always seemed to lag behind to me, but it's catching up."

Singer/songwriter Jeff Tweedy, whose band Wilco hosts Solid Sound, adds of the burst in fests, "It seems like they're getting broader and broader, and they're less defined by any kind of musical genre."

Here are a dozen festivals with musical highlights to consider:

IN AND AROUND BOSTON:

Outside the Box, July 13-21, Boston Common and City Hall Plaza. Philanthropist Ted Cutler wanted "dancing in the street" and he'll get it with this mammoth free party, five years in the making and spanning theater, opera, dance, comedy, puppetry and cookery as well as music. Boston Common rocks one Saturday with the roots-blues of Los Lonely Boys, Los Lobos and Alejandro Escovedo, while the next Saturday sports '90s local heroes the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, the Lemonheads and Buffalo Tom. Yet almost every day offers prime sets on the Common, including smooth jazzman Dave Koz, country artists Ricky Skaggs and Lonestar, and Boston-born pop heartthrobs Boys Like Girls. The fun shifts to City Hall Plaza for Hub favorites Gentlemen Hall, David Wax Museum and Bearstronaut on July 18 and roots icons Taj Mahal and Blind Boys of Alabama on July 20.

Summer Arts Weekend, July 26-28, Copley Square. In its second year, this free outdoor event organized by the Boston Globe and WGBH revs up a notch. New Orleans institutions Dr. John and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band perform Friday, as do bluegrass upstarts Della Mae. Afro-pop sparkplug Angelique Kidjo and the North Indian–infused brass/funk group Red Baraat play Saturday in addition to Session Americana and ukulele virtuoso Jake Shimabukuro. The same acts also mix it up on Friday and Saturday night in ticketed after-parties at nearby hotel ballrooms. The Boston Landmarks Orchestra graces Sunday with Galician pipes player Carlos Nunez, before the dulcet country-bluegrass star Alison Krauss closes the fest.

The Nines, Aug. 10, Willard Field, Devens. Only an hour away off Route 2, this first-year fest leaps aboard the multi-stage, multi-art landscape with art installations and comedy as well as such noted artists as evocative post-rock instrumentalists Explosions in the Sky, roots-shifting rockers Delta Spirit, R&B iconoclast Shuggie Otis, Canadian upstarts Walk Off the Earth (known for their viral cover of Gotye's "Somebody That I Used to Know") and DJ/musician Kid Koala. It's coordinated by Great Northeast Productions, which rewrote the book for modern festivals with Phish in the '90s.

Boston Calling, Sept. 7-8, City Hall Plaza. There's the Life Is Good Festival in Canton each fall, but this became the closest thing to Lollapalooza for Boston proper with its sold-out general admission May debut for 19,500 fans. Not content to merely go annual, Boston Calling bridges summer and a new school year with collegiate indie-pop kings Vampire Weekend and Passion Pit, rapper Kendrick Lamar and other bands such as Local Natives, the Gaslight Anthem, the Airborne Toxic Event, Lucius, Deer Tick and locals You Won't and Bearstronaut.

AROUND NEW ENGLAND:

Solid Sound, June 21-23, MASS MoCA, North Adams. The tight-knit maze of courtyards and factory-like spaces of MASS MoCA provides a perfect playground for Wilco's museum takeover. The host band plays an all fan-request set in its first of two headlining nights, while other artists include Neko Case, Low, Foxygen, Medeski

GRACE POTTER & THE NOCTURNALS AUG. 19, SEPT. 6.

IN OPEN AIR

Boston's usual outdoor music venues are also hopping festival-style with double and triple bills. Fenway Park's concert events are led by the sublime pop/hip-hop team of Justin Timberlake and Jay-Z on Aug. 10-11. The harborside Bank of America Pavilion features rap veterans LL Cool J, Ice Cube and Public Enemy on June 19 and the jam-savvy Black Crowes with Tedeschi Trucks Band July 30 and Aug. 6.

South to the Comcast Center, you'll find Bob Dylan with Wilco and My Morning Jacket July 20, the Uproar Festival led by Alice in Chains and Jane's Addiction Aug. 14 and the Allman Brothers Band with Grace Potter & the Nocturnals Sept. 6. West to Tanglewood, Potter's crew also pairs with Josh Ritter Aug. 19, as that Lenox landmark surges with several popular music concerts, including Joan Baez and the Indigo Girls June 23 and Barenaked Ladies, Ben Folds Five and Guster July 23. However, the most novel Tanglewood pairing remains the Boston Pops and Allmans guitarist/singer Warren Haynes in a June 22 symphonic tribute to Jerry Garcia. Could we see conductor Keith Lockhart in tie-dye? — PR

Martin & Wood, Border Music (a guitar duo of Marc Ribot and Los Lobos' David Hidalgo), the Dream Syndicate, Lucius, Os Mutantes and Yo La Tengo, which plays a regular set and a live soundtrack to a Sam Green documentary about R. Buckminster Fuller. Plus, there's comedy, as well as huge galleries for escaping any rain.

North Atlantic Blues Festival, July 13-14, Rockland, Maine. This long-standing event suggests a mini-Newport for the blues, with boats on the seacoast behind the stage and a program that features Mavis Staples, the Holmes Brothers and a guitar summit of Corey Harris, Guy Davis and Alvin Youngblood Hart.

Green River Festival, July 20-21, Greenfield Community College. Hot-air balloons are a unique attraction at this event in Western Mass. But this year's focus is on headliners, with gypsy-punk powerhouse Gogol Bordello one night and rocker Brandi Carlile the next, while the supporting cast includes Buddy Miller and Jim Lauderdale, the Skatalites, Ryan Montbleau Band and Spirit Family Reunion on three stages.

Gathering of the Vibes, July 25-28, Seaside Park, Bridgeport, Conn. Expanded out of the Grateful Dead community, this edition showcases Phil Lesh & Friends, featuring John Scofield (who also features his Uberjam group), John Medeski, Joe Russo and John Kadlecik. It's also stacked with the Black Crowes, the Roots, Tedeschi Trucks Band, Gov't Mule, Funky Meters, John Butler Trio and Grace Potter & the Nocturnals (who co-host their own Grand Point North festival with Gov't Mule and Charles Bradley in Burlington, Vt., Sept. 14-15). Gathering's late night sports Deep Banana Blackout and LCD Soundsystem's James Murphy.

Newport Folk Festival, July 26-28, Fort Adams State Park, Newport, R.I. Sold out for months except for a Friday card including Feist, the Mountain Goats and Amanda Palmer, this historic festival has been reborn as a nationally lauded showcase, with four stages tucked by the walls of Fort Adams on Newport Harbor. The Avett Brothers, Jim James, Colin Meloy, Iris DeMent and Frank Turner lead Saturday's bill, while Sunday favors Beck (in a stripped-down acoustic format), the Lumineers, Andrew Bird, Beth Orton and Spirit Family Reunion. Dawes and Deer Tick host after-shows. For those who can't get tickets, the free Lowell Folk Festival also runs that busy weekend with Lil' Ed and the Blues Imperials, Irish duo Martin Hayes and Dennis Cahill, and other broadly ethnic acts.

Newport Jazz Festival, Aug. 2-4, Fort Adams State Park, Newport, R.I. Another institution on the water, highlighted by an 80th birthday celebration for sax titan Wayne Shorter, who leads his stellar quartet of Danilo Perez, John Patitucci and Brian Blade along with guest Herbie Hancock. That tops a Saturday bill that includes Esperanza Spalding's Radio Music Society, Marcus Miller and Robert Glasper Experiment. Sunday features groups led by veterans Chick Corea, Roy Haynes and Jim Hall as well as Joshua Redman, Steve Coleman and Hiromi, whose fiery Trio Project features Anthony Jackson and Steve Smith.

KahBang, Aug. 8-11, Bangor, Maine. This independent-minded music, art and film festival, lodged between the Penobscot River and the brick buildings of this central Maine city, gears up for its fifth year with a lineup that includes rockers Dr. Dog, Lady Lamb the Beekeeper, Lights, Oberhofer and Lucius.

Rhythm & Roots, Aug. 30-Sept. 1, Ninigret Park, Charlestown, R.I. Cajun/zydeco acts including Cedric Watson et Bijou Creole, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys and Geno Delafose & French Rockin' Boogie still flavor this Labor Day weekend fixture, now in its 16th year. But there's also Steve Earle, Marcia Ball and Della Mae on Saturday, then Carolina Chocolate Drops, Taj Mahal Trio and Jim Kweskin's Jug Band's 50th anniversary reunion tour with Maria Muldaur on Sunday, plus a dance tent and Mardi Gras family parades. ×××

LET THERE BE LIGHT

HELIOS, THE GREEK SUN god, is way behind the times in transportation. A fiery chariot doesn't compare to the world's largest solar-powered boat, which graces Boston with its 5,000-square-foot photovoltaic presence this month as part of its DeepWater expedition to research climate change. Borrowing part of its name from J.R.R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings, the Swiss-made MS Tûranor PlanetSolar may evoke images of epic adventures, but with its arrival comes family activities (build your own solar boat!) and scientific lectures. Brighten up your day June 22–26 at Fan Pier.

LILY LIEBERMAN

MS Tûranor PlanetSolar docks beginning at 2 pm, June 22-26, at Fan Pier, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston (617-876-3076) swissnexboston.org/planetsolar

Poisonous Pension

Time waits for no one. Unless, of course, it's being sued. In These Shining Lives, written by Melanie Marnich, Catherine chases economic prosperity during the Roaring '20s with a job assembling watches at the Radium Dial Company. She bonds with Pearl, Charlotte and Frances, who clock in at the same company. But as time spirals into the depths of Depression, the foursome fall ill after prolonged exposure to the radioactive paint they use to decorate watches. Although gender norms discourage the women from taking action, Catherine compels a lawyer to sue Radium Dial before she runs out of time. See how they make the drama tick through June 22 at Stoneham Theatre.

Bad Hair Day

Frodo's developed some serious mommy issues since we last saw him. Elijah Wood leaves the comfort of the Shire far behind as a hair-raising serial killer in this 2012 remake of the 1980s slasher flick Maniac. Frank (Wood) copes with the death of his abusive prostitute mother by not only stalking, murdering and scalping women, but also affixing their hair onto mannequins at his shop. Young artist Anna (played by Nora Arnezeder) visits his store seeking help with her new exhibit. Frank struggles to control his depilatory desires as the pair develop a romantic relationship. Make your hair stand on end at the Coolidge Corner Theatre June 28-29.

Reviews by Sean Burns

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (In the suburbs.)

After Earth ★★ This film is hardly the career-ending debacle it's been portrayed as in the celebrity press pig pile, but it is just plain old lousy. A thousand years in the future, Will Smith's aloof, unpleasant and laughably named Cypher Raige attempts to bond with his petulant brat of a son (Jaden Smith) by dragging him along on a routine mission that's abruptly aborted after their spaceship crashes on a hostile, uninhabitable planet. Yes, that would be Earth. The only survivors are a severely injured Raige and his son, as well as a creepy-crawly, pheromone-sniffing beast. With both of the Fresh Prince's legs broken, the boy needs to traverse the unfriendly environment to recover the ship's distress beacon somewhere in the wreckage, battling a bipolar climate and some heavily evolved angry birds. Director M. Night Shyamalan occasionally finds a stripped-down adventure story beneath all the ponderous sci-fi mumbo jumbo, but the movie struggles because of the charmless lead performances and an air of dour portent. You could do worse, but that's not saying much this summer. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Bling Ring ★★½ A question lingers after Sofia Coppola's sometimes very funny fifth feature. Is this a portrait of generational vapidity or is the film just plain vapid? Attempting to have her cake and eat more too à la Harmony Korine's Spring Breakers, Coppola throws us in with a pack of empty-headed, celebrity-obsessed teens who scored a moment or two of tabloid notoriety by burglarizing Paris Hilton and Lindsay Lohan's houses. As with most Coppola films, The Bling Ring is all lush surfaces, gorgeously empty visuals and unquestioned privilege, but the satirical edge here too often goes missing. Leads Katie Chang and Israel Broussard are presumably this vacant and hollow by design. The movie kicks up a notch every time Emma Watson appears as a pouty bitch goddess with an entitlement complex at least twice the size of Hilton's mansion. Her mom (Leslie Mann, who is acidic as ever) homeschools her girls with a curriculum based on The Secret, and whenever they're on screen the film has a blistering sense of purpose that's otherwise absent. (At Kendall Square.)

The Company You Keep ★★ ½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former member of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (In the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious 6 ★★★ ½ Most movies are dumb, but very few are so smart about being so dumb. Up-and-coming indie director Justin Lin was brought on board to revive the sputtering Fast and Furious franchise for 2006's surprisingly sleek Tokyo Drift. Vin Diesel and Paul Walker had bailed for bigger and better things that never quite happened, only to return with their tails tucked between their legs after Lin took a page from late-1980s Hong Kong movies and turned this street-racing saga into soap-opera sprawl that more often than not feels like the best John Woo movie John Woo never made. Dripping with testosterone, kitschy machismo and unironic sincerity, these are bombastic pictures that go so far over the top that I don't think anybody involved even knows where the top is anymore. The latest pits our ever-expanding, unprecedentedly diverse cast against a sinister gang who are after something in a briefcase that nobody even bothers to explain. It's just a delivery system for expertly choreographed chase sequences and bare-knuckle brawls. Spectacular. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian-shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part III ★ ½ This grim, determinedly unpleasant threequel to 2009's surprise smash was a contractual obligation for all involved, and their contempt radiates from the screen in waves. The Hangover Part II was the kind of sequel that retroactively undoes your affection for the previous picture, whorishly recycling jokes and situations that were hilarious the first time around but now just feel like pandering. Part III doesn't even bother with jokes. It's a straight-up, sometimes shockingly violent action movie in which our returning wolf pack is kidnapped and forced at gunpoint to head back to Vegas and track down Ken Jeong's Asian minstrel. Bradley Cooper stands around shouting obscenities and complaining about how stupid the plot is, to a point where it doesn't feel like acting. Ed Helms all but disappears, and Zach Galifianakis has officially worn out his welcome. Director Todd Phillips stages the set pieces with a real visual brio, ignoring any pretense of comedy and treating the film like an audition reel for the next Die Hard movie. Everyone here, including the audience, would clearly rather be doing something else. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Doomsday Dudes

James Franco, Jonah Hill, Craig Robinson, Seth Rogen, Jay Baruchel and Danny McBride star as themselves in This Is the End.

Iron Man 3 ★★★ In the awkward position of making both a sequel to a movie nobody liked (Iron Man 2) and one that everybody loved (The Avengers), director Shane Black and Robert Downey Jr. just split the difference and made Iron Man 3 a sort of sequel to their barely seen 2005 Kiss Kiss Bang Bang instead. This is a ripping little detective yarn, occasionally punctuated with obligatory soulless special effects sequences required by the genre. "I'm just a man in a can," Tony Stark sighs to lady love Pepper Potts (a game Gwyneth Paltrow). And the secret to Iron Man 3's success is keeping Downey out of that can for as much of the movie as possible. At the end of the day, Iron Man 3 is still a comic book blockbuster and thus needs to end with a patience-trying half-hour or so of flying, computer-generated robot suits blowing up a whole bunch of crap. But the smirky, sardonic sensibility smuggled in by Black is almost enough to cure the summertime blues. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Kings of Summer ★★★ Director Jordan Vogt-Roberts' debut is a slick piece of work that juts out at just enough odd angles to be idiosyncratic, but never alienating. The Kings of Summer stars newcomers Nick Robinson and Gabriel Basso as best friends who have just barely survived the humiliation of their freshman year in high school. Driven mad by their parents, the two decide to run away and build a cabin in the woods. It's a little boy's fantasy of roughing it in the great outdoors, living off the land and growing some comically pubescent excuse for facial hair. But the best, most surreal flourish is that somewhere along the way our heroes have managed to pick up a pal named Biaggio. Played by Moises Arias, he's an elfin, non sequitur–spouting sprite with oversized features and the haunted stare of a man 40 years his senior. He's the best third-wheel comic relief in a teen movie since Superbad's McLovin. It's an amusing, low-stakes film with modest aspirations that are, for the most part, achieved. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner.

Wild Card

In Now You See Me, Jesse Eisenberg plays a Las Vegas magician turned bank robber.

The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Midnight's Children ★★ ½ Salman Rushdie's 1981 novel goes heavy duty on the allegories for some 500 pages, using the history of India as a template for an excessively complicated family drama spanning generations. This unwieldy film adaptation, co-scripted by the author, tries to cram it all into one movie, with results that are odd, endearing and ultimately exhausting. We have a character who can summon magical conclaves from within his oversized nose, and what comes after is a wacky, harebrained farce in which everybody has a lost love or a mistress. The over-complicated overlapping of who is still in love with who becomes so daunting, I didn't want to take notes so much as draw a flowchart. Meanwhile, this is all supposed to represent India and Pakistan, so wars keep breaking out. For about an hour, this is all terribly amusing. But there is nothing to hang onto here; most scenes last only two or three minutes, and events don't accrue so much as they just pig-pile on top of one another. (At Kendall Square.)

Now You See Me ★★ ½ If you stop and think about anything that happens in this movie, you'll realize none of it makes a lick of sense, but you'll probably be too tickled to care. This sleeper hit stars Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson, Isla Fisher and Dave Franco as a quartet of Las Vegas magicians who punch up their act by robbing banks while they're onstage. Impossible, you say? Maybe. Professional magic debunker Morgan Freeman has a grand old time taunting exasperated FBI agent Mark Ruffalo with all the tricks of the trade, as the increasingly improbable smoke-and-mirrors act escalates to a rather enjoyable level of absurdity. Director Louis Leterrier keeps the camera swooping and the pace tight, understanding that a moment's contemplation will topple this whole thing like a house of cards. The game cast is well into the silly spirit, with kudos going to Eisenberg's patented nerd-bully routine and Harrelson's mischievous smirk. Ruffalo's fuming indignation suggests he should probably play the Jackie Gleason role when they inevitably remake Smokey and the Bandit. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Place Beyond the Pines ★★ ½ Derek Cianfrance's backbreakingly ambitious follow-up to his lacerating 2010 Blue Valentine is as expansive as Valentine was intimate. It's pervaded by a doomy grandiosity and pauses to spell out the heavy-duty themes in capital letters. The director's eerie doppelgänger, Ryan Gosling, stars as a sullen motorcycle stunt rider who learns that last year's fling with a diner waitress (Eva Mendes) resulted in a child. Meanwhile across town, Bradley Cooper co-stars as a prodigal son who recently confounded his father by scrapping a promising law career in favor of enrolling as a beat cop. These characters are all set on a decades-spanning collision course that has destiny and various other freshman-lit buzzwords written all over it with a yellow highlighter. There are many wonderful moments and not a bum performance in the picture. It's just too big for its britches, puffing up a sad little tale of small-time crooks with ungainly epic portent. Cianfrance could probably be a great filmmaker if he wasn't trying so hard to be a Great Filmmaker. (In the suburbs.)

This Is the End ★★ ½ One time there was this great party at James Franco's house that got ruined by the rapture. Or at least that's the idea of this wildly self-indulgent, occasionally hilarious shambles from writer/directors Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. A sprawling cast of Hollywood's most self-deprecating comics star as themselves, with Jay Baruchel visiting from Canada and not so secretly resenting childhood buddy Rogen's douchey new movie star pals. Playing comically exaggerated versions of their offscreen personas, Rogen's the affable pothead, Franco's a pompous pseudo-intellectual and Jonah Hill oozes passive-aggressive smarm. And then the world ends. It's the same cheerfully vulgar bromance dynamic you'd expect from the writers of Superbad, with an added element of the apocalypse. The best jokes here revolve around just how pampered and useless actors are in a crisis, while looters and natural disasters are no match for the destructive power of Danny McBride. Too heavy on the improvisation and at least half an hour too long, This Is the End is also often quite terribly funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

You've Been Punked

Say Anything lives up to its name, producing neurotic, coarse lyrics that could be poetry or word vomit—and nothing is off limits. The hard-punching indie punk band has parlayed its teen-angst roots from the Los Angeles scene of the early 2000s, making its way across the country on Warped Tour and opening for such bands as Thrice and Saves the Day. Proudly leaving shows as bruised and sweaty as its moshing fans, the band continues its tour to promote Anarchy, My Dear, its fourth studio album, released early last year. Come get weird with Say Anything on June 23 at the Paradise Rock Club.

Free Bird

Hunt Slonem is for the birds—literally. The artist's latest self-titled exhibit showcases his affinity for bold, bright colors and patterns created from his avian inspiration, with a few rabbit portraits and a classic Honest Abe thrown in. Many of the oil paintings feature his signature cross-hatching, marks made with the whittled-down end of his paintbrush handle, and reflect the avant-garde lifestyle Slonem has maintained for nearly 40 years (he famously keeps more than 100 birds of various species in his personal aviary). Get extra fly at the Hunt Slonem exhibit through June at DTR Modern Galleries.

Sh*t My Ancestors Said Swear By It

Although it may seem like we've been dropping f-bombs since the dawn of time, everyone's favorite expletive wasn't always so offensive. In her first book, *Holy Sh*t*, Melissa Mohr details the history of swearing, from insults to oaths. In medieval times, for example, Catholic tradition maintained that sayings such as "Oh my God" could actually hurt the man upstairs. We don't think they'd like today's "OMG" abbreviation either. Moving from the ancient Romans to FCC censorship, Mohr takes a cultural and humorous view on the saga of belligerent lexicography. Learn a s- ton about our most beloved obscenities on June 28 at the Harvard Book Store.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. # NIGHT LIGHTS

Drama Queens

It was a perfect night for a picnic when the Lyric Stage Company hosted its Lights Up On the Town fundraiser in its Back Bay theater.

"I've never had a corn dog," said one guest, polishing hers off in several bites and declaring it delicious. Meanwhile, other guests grazed on oysters and clams from the raw bar, lined up for traditional hot dogs at a facsimile of a New York cart, and grabbed mini lobster rolls and other lip-smacking fare (courtesy of Summer Shack) from passing waiters.

Present and accounted for: connoisseur of the finer things in life Edgar Knudson and his other half, Louis Mula, purveyor of fine flutes Steven Wasser, set designer Cristina Todesco, smoldering leading man Maurice Emmanuel Parent, head honcho Spiro Veloudos, uber-boosters Nina and Don Berk, and one person who asked about bedbugs when a three-night stay at a hotel in New York came up in the live auction.

After the auction, some of Boston's biggest talents performed a short musical revue, followed by dessert and coffee… or more wine, as the case may have been.

The evening's archest remark came from a man who was asked what he thought of a production by another theater company and said, "I hated it from start to finish," then turned to a friend and said, "You might want to go talk to other people, because we're just going to keep getting bitchier and bitchier."

Prodigies 'R' Us

It's remarkable that the Back Bay Events Center could contain as much talent as it did for the annual gala to benefit From the Top, the national nonprofit that fosters young musical talents and broadcasts their performances on NPR.

Within five minutes of walking in the door, I met Cady Coleman, her brother Chris, and her son, Jamey Simpson, who, respectively, are a retired astronaut, a Sonoma winemaker and a kid who pitched a perfect baseball game earlier that day. Then there were best-selling authors Gregory Maguire and Stona Fitch, with his lovely wife, Ann, Technology Review top dog Jason Pontin and his lovely wife, Anne, über-philanthropists Debbie and Bob First and John Humphrey (sans the stunning Pam), Moses-like co-CEO Gerry Slavet and partner Jennifer Hurley-Wales, Conservatory burgermeister Tony Woodcock, Brazilian bombshell Salwa Smith, and one person who said, "I'm a Cherokee, Scottish Jew. I don't really fit in anywhere."

Dinner was accompanied by performances from such major talents as the show's host, Chris O'Riley, Jonathan Batiste (of the famed New Orleans musical clan), guitarist Tyler Rhodes, pianist Ray Ushikubo, and violinist Ade Williams, who all eventually jammed with Batiste's Stay Human Band.

The balloon drop at Presidents at Pops

As one guest put it, "I love this party, but you have to admit it's depressing to see an 11-year-old do something better than you've ever done anything in your life."

> The evening ended with a balloon drop, prompting one clueless guest to ask, without a trace of irony, "Is that why they call it the Pops?"

What's in a Name?

Besides being thoroughly entertaining, Presidents at Pops raises some major Benjamins for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This year's theme was "Hooray for Hollywood," so the statue of founder Henry Lee Higginson was dressed up like a director, with sunglasses and a beret, while the boxed suppers were served in what looked like canisters of film reel.

The high-octane crowd, meanwhile, included the likes of co-chairs Ryan Hutchins and Ed Morata, blonde banking babe Dyan Goodwin and her dapper other half, Rob Serio, hotelier Roger Saunders and the flawless Norma, VC gazillionaire Joel Cutler and the equally flawless Randi, cardiologist to the stars Larry Cohn and the soignée Roberta, and Seinfeld alum Jason Alexander, who took to the stage and wowed the crowd, proving his chops as a song-and-dance man (despite having been told as a BU student that he'd never amount to much as an actor).

As always, the evening ended with a balloon drop, prompting one clueless guest to ask, without a trace of irony, "Is that why they call it the Pops?" ✖✖✖
